Mass Meeting of Women
A well attended and enthusiastic lady voters meeting was held in the Armories on Tuesday evening. The speaker of the evening was Mrs. Starr, of Whitby, one of the energetic speakers of the Win the War League. Rev. A. E. Smart was chairman and the Madoc Brass Band rendered some very good music. Mrs. Starr is splendidly posted with information on the issue. She told her hearers that they must vote right, vote to support the boys in the trenches and vote right in voting for T. H. Thompson. Mrs. Starr described the work which the ladies had done for the men and that Sir Robert Borden had said if the women did not vote for the Union Government candidate and the Union Government failed, then it would be the first time that women would lose. Mrs. Starr thinks that the failing of Canadians is selfishness and now is the time not to think of partyism but how best can I serve my country, which question can be answered effectively in voting for the Union Government. Mr. Burnside also addressed the meeting in support of the Union Government candidate, and if those who attended the meeting voted their personal convictions there can be no doubt of the issue. Now is the time for united action and every vote counts, for the success of Mr. Thompson.

Events of The War in Brief
British losses by submarines, almost negligible in recent weeks, showed an alarming increase in the last official weekly statement of losses—14 vessels over 1000 tons and seven of less than 1000. Generally, however, the submarine campaign has been growing less menacing for some time past. This is doubtless partly due to the increase in the number of destroyers available for protection following upon the entrance of the United States to the war. It is still more largely due to the use of what are called "depth bombs"—explosives that can be dropped over the place where a submarine submerges and which are timed to explode at any required depth. If one of these bursts anywhere near a submerged craft the latter is crushed by the concussion. It is also stated that as a result of the heavy losses in German submarines, difficulty is being experienced by the German naval command in securing volunteers for the manning of such craft.
Russia's collapse and the unreadiness of the United States make hopelessness any thoughts of peace before 1919 in the opinion of Medill McCormick, in a statement made at Chicago Sunday night said: "The Germans are not winning the war. Neither are we. The war presents a stalemate from which we are unable to extricate ourselves because of the collapse of Russia and the unreadiness of the United States."
"Nowhere in Europe did I find an informed soldier or public man who believed that a military decision could be achieved before 1919, when the United States might act effectively to pressure on the central empires," he said.

W. C. Mikel, K.C. Drops Out of Contest
W. C. Mikel, K.C., drops out of the contest in East Hastings to promote harmony in war time.
Belleville, Nov. 14, 1917.
T. H. Thompson, Esq., Madoc, Ont.
DEAR MR. THOMPSON,—I have learned that you have definitely decided to submit your name to the Convention at Madoc on the 15th inst., and knowing that there is a feeling in the Riding that it should be represented on this occasion by a local man, in order to preserve unity and to prevent discord and division at a time when our efforts should be made in one direction, namely, to win the war, I have decided not to submit my name to the Convention and if I should be nominated you can state to the delegates that it is my desire that my name should be withdrawn. I am told that there is a danger of a three-cornered fight in the election. If this be so it is an additional reason why I am anxious to take every step to secure harmonious action in favour of the choice of the Convention. I have a large number of friends in the Riding and I hope and believe that they will approve of my action in this matter.
This Convention at Madoc represents those who have done and will do most to win the war in the Riding and I feel, therefore, whoever is chosen and I feel, therefore, whoever is chosen by this Convention is entitled to united support by every loyal and patriotic elector of the Riding. General French told the Canadians after the battle of St. Julien that when they held the line that day they saved the British Empire. Let us join up with that line and contribute our help. We are proud of our boys at the front; let us make the boys at the front proud of us. Let our mystic cords of memory stretch back to every battlefield and hero's grave in France and Flanders, that we may receive an inspiration to crush out any antagonism that may raise against the candidate who champions the cause of the Empire.
I am now engaged in defending in the Supreme Court of Ontario three young men who are on trial for offences punishable by life imprisonment. This has rendered it impossible for me to be present at the Convention. I wish, therefore, yourself or someone else would give to the delegates and those assembled my thanks for all they have done for me, and also my regret at not being able to be present owing to the above cause.
Yours truly,
W. C. MIKEL

U. Farmers of Alta. Campaign for Laurier
The Laurier campaign in Alberta burst in full force in Winnipeg on Saturday Dec. 1st, and the rumor that has been current for some time became an aggressive fact: that the United Farmers of Alberta, led by James Weir, vice-president, would oppose T. A. Creever in Marquette. Weir has also challenged Mr. Creever to a joint debate in Manitoba.
This campaign is a surprising one, as the Manitoba Grain Growers and Alberta United Farmers last summer united their forces for trade and commerce purposes.
Peenier Stewart, of Alberta, is understood to favor Union Government, and so does Director Freame, of the United Farmers, and H. W. Wood, president, but they are placed in the background by superior numbers. Of the other members of Alberta Cabinet, Hon. Messrs. Cross, Mackay, Marshall and Boyle are against Union and are making active campaign with Frank Oliver for Laurier.

Suppose the Review Ceased Publication

JUST suppose this community were left without a local newspaper! What would become of its local pride? Men and women might die, or marry, or go away, or suffer accident, or entertain friends, and you would hear about it all only through gossip. Farm sales and other announcements of interest in this particular part of Canada would have no publicity. Our local merchants would have no quick and cheap way of telling you what they provide for you. Our churches, schools and other institutions would have no medium of news or appeal.

The point is this:—If you kick against the subscription price, $1.50 per year, and drop your subscription, you say in effect: "This community doesn't need a local weekly." If you continue to take it, but "forget" to send or hand in the price, you do even worse.

BE LOYAL TO AND PROUD OF THE COMMUNITY YOU LIVE IN, KEEP IT ON THE MAP AND ITS NAME BEFORE THE REST OF THE COUNTRY, BY SUPPORTING YOUR LOCAL NEWS-PAPER.—THE REVIEW.

The SKY PIRATE by GARRETT P. SERVISS.

COPYRIGHT BY FRANK A. MURPHY COMPANY.

PROLOGUE.

The sea pirate has long been a fascinating figure of romance, but the march of progress has driven him into well deserved retirement, and he has now been replaced, in fiction at least, by the sky pirate, who is even more mysterious, more daring and more romantic than his predecessor. Read and there will unfold before you the extraordinary story of Captain Alfonso Payton and his airship, the Chameleon; of William Grayman, the richest man in the world; of his beautiful daughter, for whose ransom $10,000,000 was demanded; of Lieutenant Allen of the revenue service, of wonders by wireless and of fierce battles above the clouds.

CHAPTER I.

AN AMAZING ABDUCTION.

THE extraordinary outbreak of piracy which followed with such astonishing promptness the general adoption of aerial navigation in the fourth decade of the twentieth century will no doubt be regarded by future historians as one of the greatest curiosities of human annals. It has already been the subject of much laborious research and of many learned disquisitions, while the public has eagerly devoured the "lives" of a dozen of those astounding marauders of the atmosphere, who descended from the sky with the speed and ferocity of famished eagles. Whole towns were sometimes laid under contribution, the terror inspired by dropping bombs banishing all thought of effective resistance.

Of all the desperate adventures of that period none was so fascinating in personality or had the romantic charm that characterized Captain Alfonso Payton, a Spanish American, whose real Christian name was probably that which he gave, but who had dropped the name of his family, which was said to be one of the oldest and proudest in Spain, dating back to the days of the conquistadores. Payton's exploits in his famous aero Chameleon commanded a great deal of attention at times in the newspapers, but his story has never been fully told, and the closing details, the most amazing of all, were withheld from public knowledge for reasons which will be apparent in what I am about to relate.

Payton, or "Captain Alfonso," as his reckless crew always called him, was one of the handsomest men that I have ever seen. He had a Spaniard's eyes and complexion, with the stature and vigor of a modern American, while his manners were those of an ideal prince. The charm of his personality was felt by everybody who came in contact with him. He was exceedingly well educated, especially in everything which makes a man attractive to women, and if he had chosen to lead an honest life he could unquestionably have married almost any heiress or any beautiful girl that he might have fancied, and he would have been an ornament to society.

But he was a born pirate. Brave and fearless, he was absolutely reckless of the opinions of mankind, rejoiced in his wickedness, sought only the gratification of his whims and pleasures, and yet he could commit an outrage on the liberty and personal rights of others with such winning gentleness, such delicate consideration for their feelings, that often the sting was not at the moment perceived.

Payton's methods were peculiar. He had chosen his line, and he stuck to it until the end. He never attacked treasure laden liners, such as the early transatlantic liners of the International Aero express, which constituted the favorite prey of Morton, the other great pirate of the period, but he made an exclusive specialty of kidnapping, and almost invariably he kidnapped women, whom he treated with the utmost delicacy and consideration consistent with sure capture and safe keeping. There were many instances familiar to newspaper readers of his magic personality so working upon his victims that he won their respect and even friendship.

Nevertheless he was without mercy in his exactions. The object of all his abductions was ransom. No tears, no entreaties, no consideration whatever, had the slightest effect upon him. Pay or stay was his word.

The exploit which finally brought Payton's career to an end was the most extraordinary and romantic in all the long list of his adventures and one which would never have been dreamed of by a man less recklessly daring. At that time the most talked about and the wealthiest of New York's billionaires was the late William Grayman. He had accumulated a stupendous fortune by means of a "corner" in banks.

I was a young lieutenant in charge of a government aero engaged in the revenue service, and the one thing outside my regular occupation that especially interested me was the progress of invention growing out of the old wireless telegraph. Mr. Grayman, who had long been a widower, had an only child, Miss Helen Grayman, who was one of the most beautiful girls in the richest social circle of New York and was doted on by her father. She was about eighteen years of age, and it was the common report that several European counts and dukes and one prince sought her hand. But it was also averred that she had refused them all. This made Miss Grayman popular with thousands who had never met her. I recall that my interest in Miss Grayman was first pleasantly awakened by seeing her portrait in a Sunday journal over the title of "An American Girl Who Is True to America."

One evening late in June, 1930, Miss Grayman had retired to her room on the third story of her father's splendid mansion in Fifth Avenue and was about to begin her toilet for the night with the aid of her maid, Susan Jackson, when a peculiar noise at one of the windows facing Central park attracted their attention. Miss Grayman had a favorite cat, which sometimes signified its desire to enter her room by tapping on the door, and she directed Susan to open the lattice. The girl threw the window wide open, expecting, like her mistress, to see the cat leap in.

But instead of the cat a man stepped inside. He was instantly followed by a companion. Before the affrighted girls could utter the scream that was upon their lips they were seized and gagged, though with all possible gentleness, and then were swiftly carried out of the window and upon the deck of an aero which floated against the wall of the house. The leader darted back into the room, saying, "I'll put out the light."

He was gone only a minute. As soon as he emerged, leaving the room in darkness, the aero glided out over the trees of the park. The hour was not very late; but, although the avenue and the park in places were brilliantly lighted, no passerby seems to have noticed the presence of the aero.

Neither of the men who had entered the room wore a mask or made any attempt at personal concealment. In fact, the leader immediately impressed Miss Grayman with his remarkably handsome and refined face, as well as his instinctive politeness and gentility. In a few minutes the aero had risen to a considerable elevation, revealing the fiery lines of the streets below, and then it flitted out into the darkness over the Hudson. The handkerchiefs that had been bound over the captives' mouths were now removed, and they were led into a beautiful little cabin, brilliantly illuminated with colored electric lights, near the center of the deck.

Both sank into chairs, and Captain Payton—for of course it was he—took a seat opposite to them. He smiled in so friendly and reassuring a manner that it was impossible for Miss Grayman to be afraid of him. The idea of a criminal attempt upon her liberty never entered her thoughts. She imagined that it was a huge practical joke perpetrated by some of her intimate friends, and she tried to think of among them who would be most likely to venture upon such an exploit.

"I must beg a thousand pardons for carrying you off in this way, Miss Grayman," Payton said, "and I wish at once to offer my absolute assurance that no possible harm to you is intended. I have been in a manner compelled to act as I have done for reasons which you will shortly understand. Since I know your sympathy with the nation and your sympathy with the unfortunate, I feel sure that I can count upon your heartfelt support in an enterprise which has been undertaken in order to afford a great and a fully deserved gratification to certain persons who have not been treated by the world with even handed justice. For the carrying out of this enterprise your co-operation and presence have been thought essential."

This extraordinary speech was delivered in a manner as confident and gracious and with a smile so winning that Miss Grayman was far from detecting the irony that lurked in it. She now became more than ever convinced that this was really a ruse of some of her friends to engage her in a romantic adventure, although she could not imagine why they should have chosen so singular a method of enlisting her. But it had the charm of great novelty, and youth, inexperience and high spirits united to give her a delightful thrill of undefined interest in the escapade. She felt quite at her ease and was prepared to enjoy some most pleasant surprises. She answered, therefore, with no little gaiety of manner:

"Mr. — of course I do not know your name, you know."

"Brown," Payton replied promptly and with an even more engaging smile than that which had before illumined his countenance. "Commodore Frederick Brown of the Washington Aero Yacht club."

It was a lucky hit, though made entirely at random. It happened that Miss Grayman had many close friends in Washington, and now she could no longer entertain the least doubt of the correctness of her original surmise. This Commodore Brown evidently belonged to the best circle of society at the capital and had been selected by her friends to act as intermediary in their plot. The extravagance of the notion of having her carried off without the least warning or preparation at such an hour and by a stranger did not occur to her excited imagination. It seemed all as delightful as a fairy tale, and she tingled with the desire to witness the denouement, which could not fail to be most entertaining. With girlish eagerness she asked, with a knowing look:

"Where have they told you to take me?"

Payton was the shrewdest of the shrewd. He saw in a second the trend of Miss Grayman's thoughts and the advantage which it would give him. So, assuming an appearance of some confusion at being so quickly found out, he answered:

"Oh, you know I mustn't tell you that. It would spoil all the fun. You'll understand everything when we get there."

And then he broke out with a laugh so joyous, hearty and insinuating that the girl laughed with him, while Susan stretched her mouth in a broad grin over the unexpected hilarity.

"We've got quite a run before us," Payton resumed in a more serious manner, "and I think, if you will permit the suggestion, that it would be well for you to turn in, as we navigators say. I have a little cabin which, I hope, that you will find comfortable, and, with your permission, I will show you to it."

He led the way, contemptuously opened a door and, touching a knob to turn on the electric light within the apartment and as soon as the girls had entered bowed low with formal politeness, saying as he turned on his heel:

"I wish you pleasant dreams. Good night!"

The little room in which they found themselves might have been regarded as elegant anywhere. It was lavishly furnished, but with good taste, and contained two small beds.

"Good Lord, Miss Helen!" Susan exclaimed as soon as they were alone. "What will your father say?"

The remark struck to Miss Grayman's heart. It was the first time she had thought of her father and of his distress when he should discover her absence. But her eager mind was full of resources.

"No doubt papa knows all about it," she replied. "It is my friends who are doing this, you know, and of course they must have taken him into their confidence; other-

Black as Dirt About the Eyes

Liver Was All Upset and There Was Pain Under the Shoulder-blade — Two Interesting Letters.

So many people suffer from derangements of the liver that we feel sure these two reports, just recently received, will prove interesting reading and valuable information to many readers of this paper.

Mrs. F. L. Harris, Kestley P.O., Sask., writes: "I was suffering from liver trouble—had a heavy pain under one shoulder-blade all the time, and was nearly as black as dirt around the eyes, so I concluded to try some of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I did so, and before I had taken one box the pain had left me and I commenced to gain in flesh, and by the time I had taken two boxes I was completely cured and felt like a new person. My trouble was caused by heavy work out-of-doors, and, of course, heavy eating and constipation. I would advise anyone suffering from kidney or liver trouble to give Dr. Chase's Pills a trial."

Mrs. Charles Terry, Tweed, Ont., writes: "Before I was married I was troubled with enlargement of the liver. My liver became so enlarged that you could detect the swellings on either side, and it was only with difficulty that I could get my clothes on. A friend advised me to get Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and take them. I commenced this treatment, and used nine boxes, which cured me at that time. Then, about two or three years afterward I was troubled again with the swelling, but only on my right side. I secured some more Kidney-Liver Pills, and took them, which finally cured me. I have not been troubled in this way since. I can cheerfully recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to anyone having kidney or liver trouble."

"We have also found Dr. Chase's Lined and Turpentine excellent for coughs and colds. In fact, any of Dr. Chase's medicines which we have used have been good."

wise they never would have ventured so far. And what a handsome man Commodore Brown is, and so agreeable!"

It required no more than the suggestion of her fancy to persuade the romantic girl that her father was aware of the ruse and had given his consent to it. This thought increased her confidence so much that, with the utmost self-possession, she prepared to retire and was soon sleeping peacefully as if she had been in her own chamber, the imperceptible motion of the aero being totally free from the disturbing effects of the rolling and pitching of a marine craft.

But Susan, with less peace of mind, lay awake thinking and wondering for hours.

The Bridal Wreath.

The Roman bridal wreath was of verberna, plucked by the bride herself. Holly wreaths were sent as tokens of congratulations, and wreaths of parsley and rose were given under a belief that they were effectual preservatives against evil spirits. The Hawthorn was the flower which formed the wreaths of Athenian brides. At the present day the bridal wreath is almost entirely composed of orange-blossoms on a background of maidenhair fern, a spring here and there of stephanotis blending its exquisite fragrance. The custom of using orange-blossoms at weddings has been traced to the Saracens, among whom the orange-blossom was regarded as a symbol of a prosperous marriage.

Hospital for Sick Children

College St., Toronto

ITS CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing to your readers this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, the "Sweetest of all Charities," which has as its mission the care of the helpless, the sick, the crippled and the deformed.

There never was a year in the history of the Hospital when funds to carry on the work were more needed than now.

Your purse is the Hospital's Hope. Your money lights the candles of mercy on the Christmas trees of health that the Hospital plants along the troubled roadway of many a little life.

So I am asking you for aid, for the open purse of the Hospital's friend is the hope of the Hospital at Christmas, just as the open door of the Hospital's mercy is the hope of the little children throughout the year.

Calls on generous hearts are many in these times. Calls on the Hospital are many at all times, and especially when food and fuel and drugs and service costs are soaring high. YOU know the high cost of living. Do you know the high cost of healing—of helping the helpless to happiness? What you do to assist is the best investment you will ever make.

Do you realize what this charity is doing for sick children, not only of Toronto, but for all Ontario, for out of a total of 3,740 in-patients last year 646 came from 254 places outside of Toronto. The field of the Hospital's service covers the entire Province—from the Ottawa to the far-off Kenora—from the borders of the Great Lakes to the farthest northerly district.

The Hospital is doing a marvellous work. If you could see the children with crippled limbs, club feet, and other deformities, who have left the Hospital with straightened limbs and perfect correction, your response to our appeal would be instant. In the Orthopedic Departments last year a total of 330 in-patients were treated; and in the Out-Patient Department there were 1,966 attendances.

Let your money and the Hospital's mercy lift the burden of misery that curses the lives, cripples the limbs and saddens the mothers of the suffering little children.

Money mobilizes the powers of help and healing for the Hospital's drive day and night against the trenches where disease and pain and death assail the lives of the little ones.

Remember that every dollar given to the Hospital is a dollar subscribed to the Liberty Loan that opens the prisons of pain and the bastilles of disease, and sets little children free to breathe the pure air and to rejoice in the warmth of God's sunlight.

If you send a dollar, or more if you can, to Douglas Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, or

J. HENRY ROBERTSON, Chairman of the Board of Trustees.

ACTED AS POLICE SPY.

Trusted Member of Duma Betrayed His Friends.

Revelations of the Commission of Enquiry into Abuses of the former Government show that for two years there sat in the Duma, as a respected member, a burglar, police spy, traitor and organizer of crime. This member was the prominent Socialist Roman Malinowsky, whose attempts to overthrow the Provisional Government made such a stir.

Malinowsky's career, according to the commission, began with pocket-picking and burglary, for which in Moscow he was many times convicted. Fifteen years ago Malinowsky decided to enter politics and became associated with the semi-revolutionary Socialist party, to whom his criminal record was unknown. He showed such revolutionary fervor that he rapidly advanced, becoming a friend of the Socialist Nikolai Lenin, who was then living in exile abroad.

In 1910 the commission discovered Malinowsky began to co-operate with the "Okhrana," or Police Security Department, using his position with the revolutionaries in order to obtain facts. His plan was to spy and egg on his comrades into demonstrations and political crimes, and then betray them. He was taken on at first at $25 a month, but soon so distinguished himself as spy and informer that he was promoted, and was sent abroad by the police to watch and incite emigrant revolutionaries. He still kept Lenin's confidence and this enabled him to carry out his police work more efficiently.

For two years Malinowsky steadily rose in favor both of the revolutionaries and of the police. In May, 1912, he was elected Duma member. Both revolutionaries and police, unknown to one another, rejoiced. Malinowsky became so valuable that his salary from the police was raised to $250 a month. This, with his salary as Duma member, gave him an income of $5,000 a year. He drew continued praise for his admirable revolutionary work as Duma member, and reported everything to the Security Department. His speeches were carefully prepared in advance. Some were written by Lenin, and all were submitted before delivery to the police. The Enquiry Commission found corrected drafts of the speeches in the police offices.

Suspicion eventually fell on Malinowsky. But Lenin ridiculed the aspersion that Malinowsky was a spy, and by fresh attacks on the Government Malinowsky apparently proved his sincerity. In 1914 he led the extreme Left's assault on Prime Minister Goremykin, led it so stormily that he and twenty-one supporters were excluded from the session for a fortnight. Then Assistant-Minister of the Interior Djulinsky discovered what was already known to his chief—that the revolutionist Duma member was a spy and provocateur, and he informed M. Rodzianko, Speaker of the Duma. He declared, however, that there must be no police scandal. Malinowsky was allowed to resign his seat. The police continued to pay him his full salary, and he was sent abroad.

When suspicion again fell on him, his case was brought before a party court, and he was triumphantly acquitted, there being "no proof whatever that he was a police spy." His protector, Lenin, sent to the press an indignant denial of the espionage rumors. The real truth about Malinowsky was not known until after the revolution.

Malinowsky is now at liberty in Germany, and carrying on an active "Socialist" propaganda. For abetting his elevation to Duma membership, M. Makaroff, formerly Minister of the Interior, is to be put on trial.

Friendship in the Trenches.

To illustrate the fact that soldiers of very different social classes, after fighting side by side, often become affectionate friends, the author of "Notes on the War," a Frenchwoman, tells the following story:

"A very jovial young soldier used to entertain his companions most delightfully by his irrepressible gaiety. One day his spirits failed. When one of his comrades asked the reason he said:

"In time of peace I am a clown in a music-hall. It's my business to entertain people; but to-day I got a letter from my wife telling of the illness of our two children. She can't go out to work, and things look black. That's why I can't joke to-day."

"Some days later the same comrade said: 'You are merry to-day. What's happened?'

"Why, a letter from my wife says a man called and handed her three hundred-franc notes from his client, M. Jean Breton; so things are bright again for us! But who can M. Breton be?"

"The other soldier was silent for a moment, but finally said:

"Don't worry, mate! I am Jean Breton. I am rich enough to afford it. Now cheer us with one of your comic songs, please!"

Murder at Sea

The unwritten law of the deep from time immemorial has been that the captain of a ship must defend with his life the passengers entrusted to his safe-keeping and be himself the last to leave the ship.

By the laws of civilized nations the lives of those travelling on unprotected ships have been considered sacred.

It has been left to modern German culture to introduce murder at sea. We remember the Lusitania, Falabar, the Belgium Prince, but at this moment we particularly think of Capt. Fryatt, in command of a passenger ship, whose only offence was that he sought to save the ship from the hungry maw of the Prussian Wolf in endeavoring to save his ship from being submerged. He was sent through the force of a mock trial, condemned to death and was shot. Had he been a naval officer, seaman or soldier, he would have been made prisoner; because he was a merchant seaman, his life (according to the law of German civilization) must be forfeited. He is only one of many; thousands have been torpedoed again and again, and after reaching port, they sign on and are sent again on the Long Lone Trail.

For the merchant seaman there is no Patriotic allowance, separation or pension for his dear dependents; this is one of the objects the Navy League is seeking to provide for.

Come in and let us Explain Our Plan

Letters from Our Soldiers

Somewhere in France, Nov. 6th.
Mrs. Geo. Bassett, Madoc, Ont.

DEAR MADAM.—It is with a feeling of great loss that I have to tell you of your brother's death this morning. No. 4042 Driver P. M. Broadworth was killed in action this morning while packing ammunition in to our guns. A shell burst quite close to him and he died instantly, never knowing how he had been hit. His body is being brought out and will be buried tomorrow by our Chaplain in one of the nearby cemeteries.

I feel his loss keenly myself as he was one of my old buddies on whom I could always rely for any work I wanted done. The conditions one finds here are not always of the best, yet I never knew your brother to complain or do anything but turn out smiling.

In collecting what personal effects I could I came across a picture of Dr. Hodgson. I have enclosed it in his pocketbook with several other pictures. This driver, another of my old men, was killed about the same time and place.

The personal effects will be forwarded to you by registered mail. With my deepest sympathy, believe me,
Yours most sincerely,
A. ERIC COPLAND, Captain.

Next Event in Great War

Trenton Courier:—The next great events in the great war now raging in Europe, according to a little book on Bible prophecy in the possession of the Editor of this paper, will be as follows:

Russia will break away from the Allies and drop out of the present war or become friendly to Germany. This is already acknowledged by the daily papers.

Austria will break away from Germany and join the Allies, according to the same authority, which was published in 1885, and reprinted in the leading dailies of London and New York in 1902 and 1903, giving a full description of this war and its ending. England during this period will suffer disasters and lose Ireland.

In Memoriam

In memory of Mrs. Chas. Murphy. Our dearest one from us has gone. A voice we loved is still. A place is vacant in our home Which never can be filled. There was an angel band in heaven. That was not quite complete. God wanted our dear mother To fill the vacant seat.

BORN

OSBORNE.—On November 22nd, 1917, to Mrs. John Osborne, a daughter, Helen Dorene.

"THE BUSY CORNER" MADOC

Card of Thanks

We desire, through the medium of the Review, to express our heartfelt thanks to our many friends who, on the occasion of the death in action on November 9th of our brother, Driver P. M. Broadworth, showed their sympathy by many acts of kindness, and we take this opportunity of conveying to the Rev. A. E. Smart our appreciation of his sincere sympathy with us on this and other occasions.
Mr. and Mrs. George Bassett.

M. W. P. L. Notes

Mrs. W. Cross, secretary of the M. W. P. L. reports a most successful meeting at the home of Mrs. Cochrane on the evening of December 4th. Several overseas letters of appreciation and thanks were read from Corp. Scanlon, who enlisted with the 254th Battalion, and as he has no friends in Canada and is lonesome for home news the League will continue to send him letters and parcels. The League wish to thank all those who have responded to the recent call for more socks enabling the Society to send a box of 90 pair, value $108.50, as field comforts this week and another will go forward shortly. To date Miss Cross has knitted 340 pair or 52% and Mrs. M. Brown has knitted 200 pair, which is 9% of all socks shipped. After the business meeting a very enjoyable program of music and recitations was given. Miss Wellington and Miss Cochrane very kindly provided the instrumental music which was much appreciated. Miss Lightness sang two solos very sweetly and Miss Reave captivated those present with her recitations. Her rendering of the "Sewing Circle" caused much mirth and her recitation of "Baptiste" was most winning. The League wishes to thank Mrs. Cochrane and the young ladies for providing them with an evening of relaxation and pleasure and express the hope that this enjoyable hour may be repeated.

Communication

To the Editor of The Review.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to ask you to insert a few lines re Mr. Cross's nomination. He is certainly voluminous in his criticisms. He talks like the great political I Am of this election. If he were honest and practical he would give someone credit for something and state that Laurier's platform means the postponing of sending help to our boys before they are all killed. It is too late to lock the stable doors after the horses are stolen.

Now a word as to the great war. I believe that England entered into this war for righteous motives and in self defense. I believe that Canada sprung to the assistance of the British Empire from righteous motives and in self defense. I think the imperative duty of the Canadian people is its continued vigorous prosecution. I believe in organization of all the resources of the country and the conscription of wealth and war profits to obtain the money for the vigorous prosecution of the war to a successful conclusion. I am in this war to the last man and the last dollar.

A remarkable feature of the Russian revolution is the proclamation of religious freedom. LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—

Your vote and influence respectfully requested for T. H. Thompson, Unionist Candidate, officially endorsed by the Premier and the Union Government.

I am in hearty accord with the platform of the said Government and for every measure of the Government to win the war.

I am for the abolition of the patronage system, food control and the regulation of the prices of the necessities of life, limitation and regulation of profits, the best treatment for returned soldiers, and for the dependents of those who are fighting our battles overseas.

I believe that wealth should bear a greater part of the financial burden than it has done in the past, and that labour should have its just share in the Government of the country. I believe in the franchise for women equally with men, and am for any measure that will aid in a better social and economic reconstruction of Canada.

SAVED FROM AN UNTIMELY GRAVE

Seldom has a more tragic tale been told than that of this young woman, whose parents, brothers and sisters have all died of consumption, leaving her alone to make a living as best she could.

Never robust, hard work and worry soon undermined her health, when she, too, became a victim of this dreaded disease. Shunned by friends who feared contagion, without funds, for she had been unable to save from her small earnings, she seemed doomed, like the others of her family, to an untimely grave. Fortunately, she was discovered and sent to the Muskoka Free Hospital, before it was too late, where she is now doing well, with every chance of ultimate recovery.

Appeals are now being made for the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consump-tives to enable it to continue the great work of caring for just such cases as this. No matter how small the gift, it will be welcome.

In 1893 Lincoln prepared an opinion on the draft for the Civil War in which he said: "At the beginning of the war, and ever since, a variety of motives, pressing some in one direction and some in the other, would be presented to the mind of each man physically fit for a soldier upon the combined effect of which motives he would, or would not, voluntarily enter the service. Among these motives would be patriotism, political bias, ambition, personal courage, love of adventure, want of employment or convenience or the opposites to some of these. We already have,
and have had in the service, substantially all that can be obtained upon this voluntary weighing of motives.
And yet, we must somehow obtain more or relinquish the original object of the contest, together with all the blood and treasure already expended in the effort to secure it. To meet this necessity the law for the draft has been enacted. You who do not wish to be soldiers do not like the law.
This is natural, nor does it imply want of patriotism. Nothing can be so just and necessary as to make us like it if it be disagreeable to us. We are prone, too, to find false arguments with which to excuse ourselves for opposing such disagreeable things.
In this case, those who desire the rebellion to succeed, and others who seek reward in a different way, are very active in accommodating us with this class of arguments." He added,
"The republican institutions and territorial integrity of our country cannot be maintained without the further raising and supporting of armies.

There can be no army without men.
It can be had only voluntarily or involuntarily. We have ceased to obtain them voluntarily, and to obtain them involuntarily is the draft—is conscription. If you dispute the fact, and declare that men can still be had voluntarily in sufficient numbers, prove the assertion by yourselves volunteering in such numbers and I shall gladly give up the draft. Or if any one of you will volunteer he for his single self will escape all the horrors of the draft and will thereby do only what each one of a million of his manly brothers have already done. Their toil and blood has been given as much for you as for themselves. Shall it all be lost rather than that you, too, will bear your part? I do not say that all who would avoid serving in the war are unpatriotic, but I do think every patriot should willingly take his chance under a law made with great care in order to secure entire fairness.

The situation that Lincoln describes is very much the situation in Canada.
The blood that was shed by valiant Canadians at Ypres, Givenchy, Fetubert and on the Somme, at Vimy Ridge and before Lens, will have been shed in vain if an inglorious peace is imposed upon Briton and her Allies and the German people strengthened in allegiance to a dynasty which will vex mankind with its pretensions, conspiracies and intrigues until it is destroyed. Moreover, as long as Germany has power to fill the earth with apprehension Governments will continue their eager competition in armaments and huge expenditures for defence. The war is for freedom, and upon its result the free institutions of Canada depend. If it was the unanimous judgment of parliament that Canada should enter the war, and if among the people there was universal approval of the action of parliament, how can we withdraw until victory is achieved? How can we continue in the war unless we can maintain and reinforce the regiments in the field? How can we get men except by command of the State when the persuasion of the State has ceased to be effective? There are those who talk wildly about "driving men to slaughter." But more than 400,000 of the sons of Canada have driven themselves to "slaughter," and because they have done so our homes and institutions have been secure.

"Lend Us a Hand, Mate!"

We are deep-sea sailor folk. We are the men who sail and fight His Majesty's battle-ships. We are the men who go down to the sea in merchant ships. We combat storm and wave—ice-floe, shipwreck and submarine, that the Empire may not receive its death blow on the High Seas. We do this for little wage. We do it without a thought of our own safety. Nor can we provide for our loved ones if the hungry sea swallow us or the whining shell blast us into the Beyond—and there is none else to look after them.

Will you help us on Sailors' Day December 8th—through the Daughters of the Empire

The Strong Right Arm of Civilization is the Unconquerable Sailor of the British Navy and Mercantile Marine

His history and achievements are too glorious to need eulogy. Your subscriptions are asked to assist the sick and wounded, also the dependents of the mercantile sailor who receive no pensions or patriotic allowance.

As the life-blood to the body—so the value to the Empire of the Mercantile Marine.

From Yokohama and Hong Kong, Bombay, Vancouver, Naples, Fort Said, Halifax and Archangel, these sailor men and their ships are the allied lines of communication; to destroy them is to cut the jugular vein of our war.

It's a curious thing in our history, recurring through every stage, that this strange breed of high-spirited, hard-handed, far-sighted, cautious, cunning, silent British sailors have been a rock on which our enemies have been broken.
They smashed the Armada, they foiled the Dutch, they defeated Napoleon, they defy the slinking, murdering German submarine to-day.

Last year $700,000 was collected and sent overseas for the British Sailors' Relief Fund. This year the Navy League has been entrusted with the raising of funds to provide for the dependents of seaman who have lost their lives. Their wage is pitifully inadequate to their mighty task—entirely so when it comes to caring for their pensionless dependents.

The Daughters of the Empire Will Take Your Subscription

On December 8th, for the relief of Canadian and British sailors and their dependents, for Sailors' Homes, Institutes and Hospitals in Canada, and throughout the Empire. All who appreciate the magnificent work of the Navy and the Mercantile Marine are asked to contribute so that these brave fellows and their families may not become destitute when shipwreck or the perils of the seas wreak loss upon them. If the Canvasser doesn't reach you—don't fail with YOUR gift.

A GLORIOUS EDIFICE.

Rheims Cathedral May Become Pantheon for Heroic Dead.

The proposal to convert the shattered cathedral of Rheims into a pantheon for the heroic dead of all the allied nations at the end of the world war attracts attention once more to this great Gothic edifice.

Pronounced by many students of architecture the most beautiful structure produced during the middle ages, the Cathedral of Rheims is also one of the world's most historic edifices, some of the most inspiring and magnificent episodes in the life of the French nation having taken place within its walls. It is the matchless beauty and symmetry of the cathedral's west facade which distinguishes it above all other ecclesiastical buildings of the middle ages. This front of the edifice, which has been so frequently pictured since its disfigurement by the shell-fire of German gunners, has three recessed portals which are decorated with more than 530 statues of saints, apostles, martyrs, virgins, and historic figures, together with sculptured scenes of famous events. Above the portals is the indescribably beautiful rose window, fully forty feet in diameter, while to the right and left the massive yet graceful twin towers rise to a height of more than 260 feet. The spires which were designed to crown the towers were never built, although they had been started and were destroyed in the great fire of 1481, which consumed the roof and five lead spires of the north transept.

The most notable piece of statuary of the cathedral is the figure of Christ in benediction, over the smaller of the two portals of the north transept. This statue, known as 'Le Beau Dieu,' has been described as 'a work of such beauty that it may be considered the most solemn creation of its time.'

The wonderful simplicity and severity of its architectural outlines, free from the trappings of period 'restorations,' can be attributed in large measure to the fact that the cathedral was rushed to completion in the space of thirty years (1212-1242) by the Archbishop Alberic Humbert, who employed the services of four great architects—Bernard de Soissons, Gauthier de Reims, Jean d'Orbais, and Jean Loup. During the latter half of the thirteenth century the completed structure was found to be entirely too small to accommodate the vast court assemblages which gathered to witness the coronations of the kings of France, so the nave was lengthened during the fourteenth century, under the supervision of Robert de Courcy, from thirteenth century designs.

The history of the cathedral of Rheims may be said properly to date from the fifth century, even though the structure was not begun until more than 700 years later. It was Christmas day of the year 496 and St. Remigius baptizing Clovis, and another king of the Franks in the little basilica which stood on the site now occupied by the cathedral. Upon that occasion, according to legend, a dove flew down from heaven bearing a vase (Ampulla Remensis), filled with inexhaustible oil, with which the king was christened. This sacred vessel was retained in the cathedral and offered the excuse for holding the subsequent coronations at Rheims. It was shattered during the French revolution, but a fragment containing a particle of the oil was supposed to have been preserved and placed in a new ampoule, which was used for the last time at the coronation of Charles X. in 1825. After Clovis, Pepin the Short was crowned at Rheims by Pope Stephen II.; Charlemagne, by Pope Leo III., and Louis the Debonnaire by Pope Stephen IV. Beginning with the Capetian dynasty all the kings of France were crowned either in the earlier church, which occupied the site, or in the present cathedral, except Hugh Capet, who was anointed at Noyon; Henry IV., who was invested at Chartres; Napoleon, who crowned himself in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, in Paris, and Louis XVIII., Louis Philippe, and Napoleon III., none of whom was ever formally crowned.

In all this long line of Rheims coronations the most famous was that of Charles VII., who received the kingdom of France at the hands of the most heroic feminine figure of all history, Joan of Arc. At the coronation of this unworthy monarch the Maid of Orleans stood holding the standard of France and at the conclusion of the ceremony she knelt, and, embracing his knees, said, 'Noble king, now is accomplished the will of God, which commanded me to bring you to this city of Rheims to receive your holy unction—now that you are at last king and that the kingdom of France is yours.'

The great organ of the Rheims cathedral was installed in 1481 (the year of the great fire), by the master instrument maker, Oudin Hestre. Among the most highly prized possessions of the church are its famous tapestries, fourteen of which were the gift of Robert de Lenoncourt in 1530. Others were presented by Cardinal de Lorraine, in 1570, and the superb 'tapisseries de Peper-sack' (a weaver who worked for the Duke of Mantua), were given by Archbishop Henri of Lorraine, in 1633. The French Government, in 1848, added to the cathedral's rich collection two Gobelin tapestries woven from Raphael's cartoons of St. Paul at Lystra and on Mars Hill.

Australian Casualties.

The Australian casualties from the beginning of the war up to May 21, 1917, were 60,792, according to a statement issued by the Defense Department. They were divided as follows: Dead, 24,106; wounded, 31,686; missing, 5,102. It was explained that the men listed as wounded did not include those who had gone back to the trenches.

MARTYRS TO GIRDLER.

A Native Protest Against Feminine Fashions in Japan.

A caustic Japanese critic, Saito Man, has this to say in the Tokyo Advertiser about women's fashions in Japan:

'Archaic costumes, especially those universally worn by ladies, demand reform. The indigent world can be clothed out of the materials wasted in gorgeous kimono sleeves. Nothing is so absurd as the long, heavy, pendulant sleeves attached to a girl's holiday kimono. They serve no purpose, impede locomotion and are a pitiful spectacle. The girdle is more cumbersome and expensive, especially those worn in one piece of heaviest silk.'

'Formerly the latter were only worn at weddings and state affairs; now every girl has one. Every wife must have one to sport at the theater. In price this maruobi varies from 30 to 1,000 yen ($15 to $500) and upward. To girdle it requires all the strength of a well built husband or father. I do not know any Japanese woman who ever succeeded in putting on one herself. 'It is over three feet wide, folded into half that width when worn, and its length is three times the full height of its wearer. In weight it is terrific, thickly embroidered as it is with golden threads. It is chiefest attraction in the whole dress scheme of Japanese womanhood. One might as well ask a woman to discard her hair as it. Every well dressed Japanese lady is a martyr to her girdles. Her entire waist is covered with layers of belting. From the viewpoint of health the girdle (obi) is a most vile contrivance, as every doctor asserts.'

LONDON—FITZGIBBON

On Wednesday, November 7th, Miss Ethel May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fitzgibbon, 4th concession of Sidney, was united in marriage to Mr. Earl James London, of Glamire. The ceremony was performed at the parsonage by Rev. Mr. Sharpe. They were unattended. The bride looked charming in a gown of white satin trimmed with lace and pearls. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold pendant, set with pearls. After the ceremony the happy couple motored to the bride's home, where a formal reception was tendered them, after which they left for a short honeymoon among the groom's friends. The bride's travelling costume was of navy blue silk with hat to match. Although the young lady had only resided a short time in her new home she has made many friends both young and old as was shown by the many beautiful presents she received. Their many friends on the Hill and elsewhere wish them a long and happy wedded life.

ROLLINS—HOLLAND

A pretty wedding took place on Wednesday evening, November 28th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Holland, when their second oldest daughter, Bina Myrtle, was united in marriage to Mr. James Everett Rollins, son of Mrs. M. Rollins, of Cooper. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Frederick, of Ivanhoe, in the presence of about forty guests. To the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Lena B. Rollins sister of the groom, the bride entered the drawing-room leaning on the arm of her father and took their places under a white floral bell. The bride was charmingly dressed in a gown of white silk crepe de chene. She wore the traditional bridal veil and crown of orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of chrysanthemums and ferns. The house was tastefully decorated for the occasion. A sumptuous supper was awaiting them in the dining-room. The groom's gift to the bride was a set of black fox fur, and to the organist a pearl ring. The young couple left on Thursday mid morning for Trenton and on for Belleville, Trenton and other southern points. The bride's travelling suit was navy with hat to match. She received a number of lovely presents. On their coming home they will reside in Cooper. Their many friends join in wishing them a long, happy and prosperous life.

Mr. Heller was here to-day on his way to New York with 300 specimens of mammals for the American museum.

In Faith They Died

All that we had we gave,
All that was ours to give,
Freely surrendered all
That you in peace might live.
In trench and field and many seas we lie,
We who in dying shall not ever die
If only you, in honor of the slain,
Shall surely see we did not die in vain.

We made our sacrifice,
Love of those loved we left,
Homes and the simple joys,
Homes now of joy bereft.
But, after striving greatly, we can sleep.
Content we sowed that British lives may reap.
If only you, in honour of the slain,
Shall surely see we did not die in vain.

We did not cavil, we
All that we had we gave,
Gave with no niggard hand;
All that we gained a grave, unless there be O'er hell's fell hosts triumphant victory.

See that you keep your faith with all your slain,
Then, only then, we have not died in vain.

A Wonderful Newspaper

The Family Herald and Weekly Star, of Montreal, is a most unique paper and very popular in every home in Canada. It is surprising what great value to the reader is contained in every issue. Few homes are without it and they are the losers in not having it. The subscription price is $1.25 a year, and includes a colored war map of the fighting area in Europe. It is a splendid map and of great assistance to understand the war. We understand the map offer is shortly to be withdrawn. The year's subscription and war map are certainly big value at $1.25.

Why Called "Automobile" Skates

Because the blades are made from the special Chrome Nickel Steel perfected for use in those parts of high grade automobiles where strength and lightness must be combined—a very different quality of steel from that usually made in making skates.

The blades are tempered hard as glass on the outside, and take a very keen edge, but they are not brittle. By a special process, the hardening extends inward for only a certain depth. This leaves a soft, tough "core" which renders the blade practically unbreakable.

The Aluminum Tops are also made from the same grade of aluminum alloy as used in the crank cases of the better motor cars.

The automobile influence is perhaps also responsible for the unusual elegance of line and finish which imparts such an air of distinction to Automobile Skates.

Close Call

That one of Madoc's citizens is to-day among the living is due to a fortunate circumstance not intended by one of the principal actors in the drama. A few days ago a Sergeant Major at the Trenton Munition Works drank a quantity of alcohol under the impression that it was the real stuff. The influence of the deception on the S. M. was not long before it began to manifest itself in a rather dangerous way. The S. M., who was armed with a 32 automatic revolver, began to hold up everyone whom he met, especially the guards on duty. He entered the guard house and fired two shots. Lieut. Wilfrid Smith was phoned for who, on his arrival, attempted to arrest the Sergeant when the Sergeant pointed his revolver point blank at Smith's breast at a distance of about 2 feet and pulled the trigger, but fortunately for Smith it was an empty cartridge that was in the cylinder. Before the would-be assassin had time to bring the next cartridge into line with the barrel the Lieut. disarmed him and had him put under guard.

Appeal for Men at the Front

The following is a copy of a letter addressed to Senator Foster by Capt. Rev. Allan P. Shattford. Can any one who is privileged to vote on Monday next vote for an anticonscription candidate and ignore this pathetic appeal from the men at the front?

I have been wanting for some time to write you in the hope of discovering the exact condition of things politically in Canada. We are much concerned here because we are quite satisfied that the issue is more tremendous than the people at home think. If conscription is not carried it will be the gravest disaster that could happen in the lives of our fighting men. Everything really hangs upon that question. Our men have done magnificently—it is everywhere conceded that the Canadian corps is the finest in the whole army. In every engagement they have been splendidly successful—there are deeds of courage and heroism that thrill one to the core; in fact, I am firmly persuaded that human bravery is higher than ever it was in all the long history of the past. There is, however, a war weariness setting in and can you wonder at it? Humanity after all can only endure so much. The constant marvel to me is that it has held out so long, and if we put too much strain upon it something will snap. There was never an hour when we required more cheering and encouragement. Our lads must be assured that the country is behind them—if by the decision of the Canadian electorate that fact is revealed the future is assured. If, on the other hand, there is any uncertainty about the approaching election it will paralyze our efforts and take the heart out of our brave boys. What is the hope, therefore? I am watching the despatches anxiously for I stand in a position of opportunity and responsibility. It is my privilege to speak to thousands of these men every week and I can, therefore, do much to strengthen the morale of the corps. But I do not want to buoy them up with false hopes—to be quite frank, I am desperately afraid of the situation in Canada. I see that Laurier is resigning and a new leader contemplated, also that Borden is taking able Liberals into his Cabinet. Is the election to be fought on party lines? Are they trying to eliminate conscription as an issue? I tell you solemnly, my dear friend, that the Canadian people must, in some way, be made to see that this time is critical beyond exaggeration. Cannot something be done even yet to eliminate the party issue and make the election a straight war issue? Let the whole country realize that Canada's future depends upon her full and determined prosecution of the war. Every available dollar and man must be put behind the Government—it matters little whether the Government be Conservative or Liberal. But let no mistake be made that the Government is a certain and vigorous war Government. You will forgive my writing so strongly but I know your position and influence and am convinced that your last ounce of strength is in this struggle. The best evidence is in the surrender of your boy. Can you give me something that will bring my message to the troops with directness and absolute conviction? We are facing a long dreary winter and I yearn to put cheer and inspiration into our wonderful lads.

I have had a busy summer, all day and every day working amongst the men. Yesterday I preached four times and spoke to 5000 men. A big storm was on last night and all our lights were out. I had one candle to read over the hymns and the men sang in utter black darkness and it was weird and impressive. I must have made a ghastly kind of preacher standing in the flitting light of a tallow dip. How wonderful it was to hear those lads sing the verse after I read it. They roared even when they couldn't remember the words. We are on the move just now so packing is the order of the day. All good wishes and a thousand regards.

Very sincerely yours,
ALLAN P. SHATTFORD.

Mr. Thompson's Meetings

The following have been taken from the Belleville Ontario:

MEETING AT PLAINFIELD
A meeting was held at Plainfield Wednesday night in favor of Mr. T. H. Thompson, the candidate for Union Government. W. J. Hall occupied the chair and addresses were delivered by Reeve Jordison, of Montague; Henry K. Denyes, Sandy Moore, Mr. Thompson, the candidate; Mrs. Starr, of Whitby, and W. C. Mikel, K.C. After the meeting Mrs. Starr organized the lady voters and Mr. Thompson held a general organization meeting.

MEETING AT CANNIFTON
T. H. Thompson, the Union Government candidate of East Hastings, held a meeting in the township of Thurlow December 5 at Cannifton. Ex-Warden Willet Farley occupied the chair and after the candidate had opened the meeting the following gentlemen spoke on his behalf: Simon Fox, Reeve, and Henry Kells, deputy reeve of Madoc township; Dr. Embury, reeve of Bancroft; T. Montgomery, reeve of Rawdon; and W. C. Mikel, K.C. Mr. Mikel went into the issues exhaustively. He contended that as Laurier had always followed the wishes of Quebec it would be unwise to place him at the head of a Government because he would be under the control of Quebec more than ever, and Quebec was opposed to helping either Great Britain or France in the war. Canada would very likely be compelled to drop out of the war in deference to Quebec's wish and the $400,000,000 War Loan could, on the vote of Quebec members, be diverted to other purposes. He said that as Mr. Cross was endorsed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, a vote for him was a vote for Laurier and a vote for disunion, while a vote for Mr. Thompson was a vote for union. He also contended that a vote for Mr. Northrup simply brightened the chance of Cross. If you helped to elect Cross you would insure way to give support to the Union Government, that is, by voting for Thompson. Remember what Lloyd George said: "He that promotes disunion helps the enemy and hurts his country."

MEETING AT ROSLIN
"Let all the ends thou almost at be thy God's, thy country's and truth's." With this quotation from Shakespeare Mr. Mikel, K.C., brought an eloquent address in support of T. H. Thompson to a close. He explained that the Military Service Act was designed to make Quebec do its share, not to force the boy from the farm. The Department of Agriculture would have a representative at the Tribunals to protect farming interests and to appeal where mistakes were made and even take the matter with the Department of Militia.

Mr. F. A. Covert, of Montreal, made an eloquent appeal to help free speech, liberty and justice, which were denied in Quebec, by supporting Mr. Thompson.

Rev. Mr. Bulteel, Anglican clergyman, and Rev. Mr. Mitchell, Presbyterian minister, also appealed for support of the Union Government candidate.

Judson Gunter told the audience that the 6 northern townships had dropped politics and would vote solidly for the Union Government candidate. He also spoke in praise of the ability of Mr. Thompson.

The Union candidate said the convention chose him without any canvassing on his part and the Government had endorsed him without any solicitation from him, and he felt that every elector who wanted Union Government to win should support him. Some people had a mistaken notion about the Military Service Act. They would find that no injustice even though some tribunals might make a mistake. The slacker in Quebec would, however, be made to do his share. We sent our boys away and they have done nobly. We must do our duty to them. Reports from all over the constituency show that I will win with a big majority though Northrup is against us.

Sandy Moore occupied the chair and made an appropriate address emphasizing the necessity of everyone doing his bit for the Union Government candidate.

MEETING AT SHANNONVILLE

There was an enthusiastic meeting in support of Mr. Thompson.

James Hill, a prospective candidate, was chairman and pointed out that a vote for Northrup was a vote for Cross and a vote for Cross was a vote for Laurier which gave comfort to the Kaiser.

Andrew Kirk, ex-Warden, said Tweed and Hungerford was solid for Thompson.

Judson Gunter, Reeve of Tudor and Cashel, said that Cross would not poll a vote in that constituency. A Reeve Fox and Deputy Reeve Kells, of Madoc township, said both Liberals and Conservatives were supporting Thompson.

Reeve Jordison, of Montague, said that Thompson was the only candidate mentioned in his section. He said Cross had too little experience of public life. He said Cross could not even get elected Reeve of the village of Madoc. Thompson had much experience, had been Warden of the County and had occupied important offices in the three industries.

Mrs. Starr, of Whitby, organized the lady voters.

G. W. Morley, of Toronto, made a powerful appeal in favour of the Un-

SUPPORT UNION GOVERNMENT

Liberals and Conservatives are United
The People Must Unite to Win the War

A Laurier-Bourassa Victory means deserting our boys in the trenches for over a year, throwing up our hands and quitting! Don't shout "Kamerad" under the Referendum proposal. Come out, and fight for Union Government.

Make No Mistake

IF LAURIER WINS:

- (1) Canada will send no more reinforcements to the front, which practically means quitting the war and placing the country in the same class as Russia.
- (2) The French-Canadians who have shirked their duty in this war will be the dominating force in the Government of the country.

ARE THE ENGLISH-SPEAKING PEOPLE PREPARED TO STAND FOR THAT?

It is because the French-Canadians have not done their duty that Conscription had to be resorted to. The French-Canadians have made it perfectly clear that they do not like the war and are against Canada participating in it further. Some of them even go to the length of saying that the soldiers should be brought back from the front. The Nationalists are demanding that the men who have been enrolled under the Military Service Act be disbanded and sent back to their homes. To secure the Nationalist support Laurier-Liberal candidates in Quebec have signed the following pledge:—

"I, the undersigned, candidate in the Federal Elections, undertake by these presents, if I am elected, to demand the immediate suspension of the Military Service Act, 1917, and of all its effects until Canadian electors have pronounced by way of plebiscite; and should the majority of the electors consider it, that it be considered as null from its origin and that in consequence all conscripts be disbanded."
"I also undertake to vote against any Government which should refuse to adopt the above mentioned policy."

VINOL MAKES GOOD BLOOD

Positive—Convincing Proof

Many so-called remedies for anemia are only so in name. Their makers are afraid to prove their claims by telling what their medicines contain. The only way to be honest with the people is to let them know what they are paying for. Here is the Vinol formula. When the doctor knows what a medicine contains, it ceases to be a "patented medicine."

Any doctor will tell you that the ingredients of Vinol, as named above, will enrich the blood and banish anemia and create strength. When the blood is pure and rich and red, the body is strong and robust.

You can prove this at our expense because your money will be returned if Vinol does not improve your health.

Had Piles For Ten Years

And Tried Nearly Everything Except a Surgical Operation Without Obtaining Relief—Tells How Complete Cure Was Effected.

There are reported here three cures of chronic cases of piles. In all three cases many treatments were tried before it was discovered that Dr. Chase's Ointment is about the only real cure for this distressing ailment.

Mrs. A. Oates, 32 Gilmerton street, Brantford, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Ointment as a household remedy for ever so long, and am particularly indebted to it for a cure from Piles. I had suffered from this annoying trouble for ten years, and tried nearly everything I heard of. After using Dr. Chase's Ointment a short while I was completely cured."

Mrs. Wm. Shantz, 155 Albert street, Kitchener, Ont., writes: "For several years I was troubled with bleeding piles. I tried different remedies for relief without success. I read in Dr. Chase's Almanac of the benefits other people were receiving from Dr. Chase's Ointment, so I sent to your office for a sample box. I found it gave me such relief that I went to a drug store and purchased a full-sized box. I have used several boxes since, and have derived more benefit from its use than any remedy I have ever used."

Mrs. F. Cussons, Victoria street, Ingersoll, Ont., writes: "About two years and a half ago I was suffering from Piles. I had tried many different remedies for this distressing trouble, but nothing helped me. Finally I got a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and after using it found that I was completely cured and have not been bothered in this way since. I can cheerfully recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering as I did."

CHAPTER II

AFTER AN ALL NIGHT FLIGHT.

WHEN Miss Grayman and her maid awoke the Chameleon was running high in the cool blue morning air, and the rays of the just risen sun were streaming across the tops of seemingly boundless forests spread far below them. They were, indeed, at so great an elevation that the hills and valleys, covered by the green mantle of the trees, resembled the swells and troughs of immense waves. Here and there a bare rocky mass rose out of the sea of vegetation like an island.

Miss Grayman had never been on an aero before. Her father always preferred the old fashioned railroads and steamships, and she seldom made even a short journey without him. As she glanced over the edge of the deck, which seemed frightfully close, and her eyes ranged down the clear atmospheric depths, beholding the earth so far beneath, she became giddy and clung convulsively to her companion. But Susan was no less affected than her mistress by the unaccustomed experience and could lend her neither support nor courage. They were about precipitately to retire into their room when the cheery voice of Commodore Brown was heard as he approached, smiling and bowing gallantly.

"Good morning, Miss Grayman," he said. "You are out rather earlier than I expected, and I must apologize for not having had your coffee prepared sooner. It will be sent to your room at once. As soon as you have finished your breakfast if you will come out on deck again I can promise that you will no longer experience distress from our elevation. I fancy that you are not accustomed to these heights."

"It is my first aerial trip," she replied.

"I am charmed to have had the opportunity of offering a new pleasure to Miss Grayman," he responded, "for a pleasure I know you will find it to be."

Miss Grayman colored slightly and glanced at Payton with a smile which

"WE ARE JUST A MILE AND A HALF ABOVE SEA LEVEL."

she would not have bestowed upon him if she had guessed his real character or the seriousness of her own situation. She was on the point of referring again to the supposed plot of her friends when an unmistakable Frenchwoman with a white cap on her head appeared, bearing a steaming urn. At Payton's order she placed it on a table in Miss Grayman's room.

"Go," said Payton, "and take your coffee while it is hot. Afterward we will look over the landscape, which I dare say is the most extensive you have ever seen."

Miss Grayman and Susan entered their apartment, and Payton turned away.

"I'm sure I shall like it," said Miss Grayman as they sipped their coffee. "How easy the motion is! It's much pleasanter than a ship. I don't know why papa would never take an aero, but he'll have to do it hereafter, for I shall insist. I know I shall not be the least bit afraid or dizzy when we go out again. It was the surprise that upset me at first—seeing things so awfully far down, you know."

Payton was waiting for them when they emerged.

"Oh," he exclaimed, "isn't this glorious? Look at the view!"

It was indeed a most splendid prospect that was spread beneath them. The sun had risen higher, and decks of beautiful clouds were casting picturesque shadows that flitted across the rolling green surface of the earth.

"Why the aero is all dressed in white!" cried Miss Grayman, catching sight of the white stuffy material that played in the wind created by their rapid motion.

"Why shouldn't she wear white dress

when she carries such a passenger and goes on such an errand?" responded Payton, with a bow.

Whatever of impertinence there might have been in his words was softened into a graceful and acceptable compliment by his voice and manner, and Miss Grayman blushed and smiled in return.

"Really, Commodore Brown, you do me too much honor," she said. "Impossible," was the reply, "but I know what is required in recognition of the honor your friends have done."

"Where shall we meet our friends?" she asked quickly.

"You certainly wouldn't wish me to betray a confidence," he replied, smiling. "I should like to answer, but for the present my lips are sealed."

"Oh, then tell me, please, how high up are we? Susan says a hundred miles, but I say not more than ten."

Payton laughed heartily. "Well," he said, "you are nearer the truth than Susan, although your estimate, too, is a trifle extravagant. Let me see," and he consulted an indicator on the outer wall of the cabin. "We are just a mile and a half above sea level and about three-quarters of a mile above the highest peaks that you see down there."

"Then I guessed truly that we were going over mountains?"

"To be sure we are. But it is not quite an unbroken wilderness. You see that little town in the valley yonder, don't you?"

"Is that a town?" asked Miss Grayman, with surprise. "I thought it was a heap of rocks."

"No, it is a town, though not a large one. But you can see smoke rising from some of the chimneys."

"What is the name of the town?"

"I mustn't tell you that just now, you know."

"Oh, yes; I forgot that you are pledged to secrecy. But I suppose I am at liberty to guess, and I guess that these are the Catskills."

"Perhaps," said Payton, with another smile. "Really, Miss Grayman," he added in a serious tone, "if I had foreseen how unpleasant it would be to decline to answer your perfectly reasonable questions I should have hesitated to accept this mission."

The girl actually rebuked herself for letting her curiosity increase the embarrassment of a gentleman who she felt must keenly regret his rather equivocal position.

"You know the Mitchells in Washington, I suppose?" she asked.

Payton saw that if this question were followed by a cross examination he would be trapped; accordingly he shut off that line of inquiry at once.

"Oh, Miss Grayman," he said, "of course I know almost everybody worth knowing in Washington, but really, you see, if we begin to discuss these things we shall inevitably trench upon forbidden ground—something, you understand, only for the moment. Afterward, in a little while, everything will be clear and we can talk freely."

In the meantime let me beg of you not to lose the enjoyment of this glorious cruise in the pure morning air.

"It is wonderfully beautiful," replied Miss Grayman, "and to me the appearance of the earth seen from so great a height is indeed a revelation. It is entirely unlike the view from a mountain. And then it glides away under us so fast. It seems as if it were flying and we standing still! But, look," she exclaimed, clasping her hands, "we are actually among the clouds!"

A huge roller of cirro-cumulus which seemed rushing to meet them had suddenly attracted her attention. It was so daintily beautiful that for a moment she closed her eyes. The sunbeams that transfused its margins encircled it with a border of gold and pink, while the denser central parts were of a delicate pearl gray clouded with soft opaline masses. Suddenly the Chameleon plunged into the cloud. In an instant the sunshine and the color were gone, the blue sky vanished, the earth beneath was concealed, and they seemed to have passed from the brilliant morning into a thick, damp, dismal fog. Raindrops gathered on the rigging of the aero, and with surprising quickness the deck became dripping wet. The cold, by contrast, seemed intense and very penetrating, and Miss Grayman shivered.

"Go into your room at once, Miss Grayman," said Payton. "This is no place for you now; you will take cold. In a few minutes we shall emerge from the cloud and all will be as before."

She was about to obey, calling Susan to follow her, when a spasm seemed to seize her, succeeded by a paralysis which prohibited all movement. She became as helpless as if her hands had grasped the handles of a powerful electrical machine. At the same time a curious crackling noise broke out on all sides and little pointed flames flickered on every jutting object. Susan cried out in terror, but Miss Grayman was unable to open her lips.

These enigmatical electric phenomena which manifest themselves capriciously when one is among the clouds were comparatively unfamiliar in those days, and even yet little is really known about them. A singular, blue light which spread a ghastly illumination around the aero added to the consternation, and Susan fainted from fright.

Payton sprang to aid Miss Grayman. As he touched her hand a blinding spark leaped forth, and he dropped to the deck, but was on his feet again in a second. At the same moment Miss Grayman felt the force which had held her immovable relax its grasp, and she fell in a dead faint beside Susan.

When they came to themselves they found that they were in their little cabin. Payton stood beside them with a smiling smile in his hand. The aero was near with another: the door was wide open, and brilliant sunshine was pouring in.

"Do not feel any alarm, Miss Grayman," he said. "It is all over. There was no real danger. The spirits of the air were a little inconsiderate in welcoming you to their domain, but they meant well. I have often been similarly shocked by them, but it is only intended for a friendly pat on the shoulder."

As Payton spoke he laughed so cheerfully that Miss Grayman could not smile in response.

"I am afraid that I shall not like the spirits of the air, Commodore Brown," she said. "They are rather too exuberant in their greetings. I do not care to meet them again."

"And you shall not," replied Payton. "We have dropped down below the region of the clouds and are now entirely outside their fairy realm. They will trouble us no more with their attentions. You may be interested to learn that we are nearing our destination."

"Oh," said Miss Grayman, instantly rising, full of vivacity, "then our friends are close at hand?"

"I hope so," said Payton. "But we may have got the start of them. We shall know in a short time."

Payton had a wireless telephone apparatus on the Chameleon, and he now retired to his cabin and sent out a call, to which after a brief interval he had a response. He then held a long conversation with some distant intention etc.

When the conversation was finished Payton hung up his receiver and leaned back in his chair with a laugh. But it was a very different laugh from that with which he was accustomed to get his "guests" into good humor and make them feel that he was the most agreeable of companions. It was a laugh that would have sent a chill to Miss Grayman's heart, so cold, so cruel, so expressive was it of satisfied cunning and anticipated triumph.

It was a couple of hours before Payton knocked at the door of the little cabin and called Miss Grayman out to witness the arrival of the aero at its destination. She was a little surprised to find how rapidly they had descended from their aerial flight. They were now within a hundred feet or so of the ground, and as she glanced around she could see nothing but trees on all sides—tall, wild looking trees whose aspect proclaimed that they at least belonged to a real wilderness.

"I begin to doubt," said Miss Grayman, addressing Susan, for Payton had immediately withdrawn to superintend the landing, "whether we are, after all, in the Catskills. I don't believe that the Catskill woods are so large."

"But there was a town, you know," said Susan.

"Ah, yes, but we may have come hundreds of miles since we saw that. I can't understand why my friends should have put the rendezvous at such a distance, but I suppose they had some good reason. Anyway, we shall soon see them now, and all will be explained. Just think of it! They must have come by aero also. Isn't it romantic?"

While they were talking the Chameleon quietly descended until her aeroplane almost swept the top branches of the tall pines and hemlocks. Her movements were directed by sharp, short orders from Payton. Suddenly she sank through an opening in the treetops and entered a forest of glades, and with the branches sweeping overhead, she moved very cautiously, like a ship in a tortuous channel. Then a partial clearing appeared directly ahead, and a gleam of water came to their eyes. This soon resolved itself into a small lake, embosomed in the forest, with a large building on its shore.

"Stop her!" commanded Payton. A shiver ran through the aero, she settled gracefully for a few moments and came to rest just in front of the building. Immediately two men in woodsmen or hunter's dress ran to meet her, and in the door of the building appeared a stout, rosy faced woman wearing a huge white cap and smiling a welcome.

"We have arrived safely, Miss Grayman," said Payton, approaching, but in hand. "Permit me to assist you down."

She took his offered hand and descended upon a bright, sandy path which led from the lake to the house. "I welcome you to my lodge in the wilderness," said Payton. "It has never had a guest who could do it so much honor."

"Then this is yours?" she exclaimed. "Oh, yes; it belongs to me, but quite as much to my friends."

"But where are my friends?" "I had hoped to be counted as one of them," Payton replied, smiling. "But, unfortunately, the others have not yet come. I rather expected to distance them, for my aero has few rivals for fleetness, but they cannot be far away. Let me put you in charge of my housekeeper, Mrs. Williams, who will make you as comfortable as possible until their arrival. Ask her for anything that you may require and command her as if she were your own servant."

"Mrs. Williams," he continued, "this is Miss Grayman of New York. Show her and her maid to the front suite and see that she lacks nothing to make her comfortable."

Mrs. Williams made a profound courtesy, and her smile broadened as she led the way into the lodge.

Under national service the State calls all its manhood to arms but reserves from odium and suspicion all those who can better serve its interests on the farms, in the factories, or in other necessary activities. The Military Service Act of Canada, as has been said, was passed by parliament in obedience to a general public demand and in assertion of the Government's deliberate conviction that only by selective draft could the necessary reinforcements for the army in France be obtained and the orderly continuance of production and industry assured. In the machinery for applying and enforcing the measure there are ample safeguards against partiality, injustice or partisanship. The Military Service Council has been constituted to advise and assist in the administration and enforcement of the Act. The Deputy Minister of Justice is the chairman of the Council, and the other members have been chosen equally from the two great political parties. The advice of the Council is sought in order to ensure that the Act will be administered with just and equal regard to the interests of all classes of the community, and in all questions affecting the draft, the General or the Minister of Justice, the provincial registrars and the local tribunals receive instructions from the Council as to the manner in which their duties are to be discharged; and while the local tribunals exercise their judicial functions with perfect independence, so far as concerns the determination of individual cases, they may nevertheless refer to the Council for direction or advice upon general questions of doubt or difficulty. Provincial tribunals, chosen from the judiciary of the various provinces, are provided for resort by those who are dissatisfied with decisions of the local tribunals; and in order to ensure uniform treatment of claims for exemption, as well as sympathetic and consistent consideration alike of local and national conditions, an ultimate appeal is authorized to Mr. Justice Duff, a distinguished member of the Supreme Court of Canada.

There is reason to believe that the selective draft will operate with greater equality than has distinguished voluntary recruiting in the townships. Doubtless there are farms from which the only son has gone to the front, while from other farms the men who could have gone have exercised the option which they had to remain at home. Such inequalities will be avoided under the draft system, and the men will be taken who can best be spared. In any occupation, be it that of the farmer, the miner, the skilled artisan or the mechanic, there be men available for military service who for the present are not needed in their ordinary pursuits, these will be required to serve; but it will be the duty of the tribunals, as much to uphold a natural title to exemption, as to reject a claim which cannot compatibly with the national interest be established. Professional and literary men as well as men employed at manual occupations, and those engaged in directing them may seek exemption by reason of the importance to the community of the work in which they are habitually engaged and which would in a material degree remain undone if they were taken. The State will first seek those who have no dependents, but the fact that a young man is unmarried will not be conclusive evidence against his exemption. He may hold a position for which he has peculiar qualifications, and in which his service is essential to the prosperity or is frequently revealed in these war times even in this well-to-do Province. Hard enough to be poor—still worse to be sick and poor.

The lot of the consumptive is a specially trying one. Only recently a family was discovered living in two small rooms over a store. At one time they had occupied a comfortable home but the father took sick and had to give up work. With the savings all gone, they were forced to sell the furniture to buy food. When the man was found to be a consumptive, this was the opportunity of the Muskoka Free Hospital to bring relief so that not only would the stricken husband have a winning chance for life, but the wife and children should be removed from danger of contracting the disease. Under skilful guidance the home was cleaned up and the family temporarily provided for. It is now reported that the patient is doing well, with every chance of recovery.

This is the great work carried on by the Muskoka Free Hospital which is now appealing for help.

comfort of the community. No doubt there are many young men in Canada who should not have waited until compelled to serve, but there are also thousands who have chafed and fretted because they could not enlist, and whom it would be grossly unjust to describe as "slackers" or "shirkers." Reflection upon these considerations emphasizes the defects of the voluntary system and suggests the essential justice and fairness of national service.

To the Editor of The Review.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow an old farmer a little space in your good paper because I am an old man and I have done a sight of thinking in my day and I sometimes see things other fellows don't. I read some too—The Review I get and a couple of farm journals and they are the readin' for a farmer. I don't set much stock on them city papers. They are mostly advertisin', one thing and another. These days they do seem mostly taken up with this here Union Government advertisin'. Looks like a forced sale to me—bankrupt stock. I calculate if this here Union Government had a good sure thing they naturally would not waste a couple of million dollars advertisin' in them city papers—and in the Marmora Herald too. Josh! it will take pretty nigh all the Liberty Loan to pay for it. Well, no, I didn't buy any Liberty Bonds. I intend to all right but I'm going to wait till I see whose goin' to spend it. I don't believe in them city papers gettin' it all. Say, Josh, I'm a Tory from way back and I wouldn't have nothing to do with that Union Government. They are saving a lot of nasty dirty talk about Quebec. Sir John A. McDonald never talked that way. Now there was a man. I wish he was alive to-day. Josh, it's one d—d thing after another, conscription, exemptions, elections, appeals, enumerators, Liberty Bonds, and all advertised in them city papers—makes an old man tired. Well, guess I ain't got no more to say, only—well—I can't vote for no Union Government cause I'm a Tory. Well, good-day to you. Yours, FARMER.

Send Relief to Halifax

A meeting of the citizens was called to meet on Monday evening in Mr. C. R. Ross' office to consider the sending of relief to the sufferers in Halifax. Rev. A. E. Smart was elected chairman of the committee. Mr. G. H. Gillespie as secretary-treasurer. The following committee was appointed:—Rev. W. S. MacTavish, Messrs. Blair, Wellington, Bristol, Kincaid, Connor, Snider, Aylesworth, Ross, Wyman, with secretary and chairman. The committee will wait on the Council to secure their assistance in a grant of $200. Canvassing teams were appointed to call upon the citizens, the teams meeting on Thursday evening in Mr. Ross' office to which all citizens are invited. Subscriptions will be gratefully received and a list of subscribers will be given in the press in next issue. Let everyone give to this worthy cause.

Interesting Debate

The Literary Society gave an interesting program of choruses, recitations and a well contested debate on the subject: "Resolved that modern civilization is a failure." The speakers to the resolution were Margaret Watson and Harold Cross, of the High School, and to the negative Alice Bateman and Jennie Brown, of the Model School. A very lengthy catalogue of crimes against civilization as committed by the most civilized nations of the world were given by the speakers on the affirmative side, while the speakers on the negative side showed the advantages to humanity derived from civilization. Messrs. Brown, Kincaid, Dr. MacTavish and Rev. A. E. Smart, judges of the debate, after due consideration returned a verdict of not proven by the affirmative. Between the various numbers the college yells of the two institutions were given with a vigor and enthusiasm that showed that there were few slackers there. Miss Jean McIntosh, of Belleville, gave a number entitled "The Sales Lady" in which she showed considerable powers of personation. A pleasant evening was brought to a close by singing "God Save the King."

THE LUDBROOK SHOE STORE

The Help Problem Solved

More work to do on the farm than ever before. The farmer is expected to keep more stock and more crops, because the Empire needs more food. The help problem is as acute as ever. The B.T. Manure Carrier is the answer.

B.T. Manure Carrier
Gets Stale Work in Two Minutes

It's the only manure carrier that can be used in a field, on a road, or in a city. It runs on a track right over muddy roads or snow drifts. One man can load it from a pile and the job is done. It only takes 10 minutes to install and keep in no time.

The B.T. Manure Carrier shows how quickly you can lower the burden of manure from the gutter. Just lift the lever, and the manure falls into the tank. This breaks the load while you are still at it.

Put your outfit in now. The B.T. Manure Carrier is the best. Here's the thing: You can buy it now and have it delivered to your door. We will measure up your barn for you.

ANXIETY

THE KAISER—How is Canada voting?

Letters from Our Soldiers

Nov. 7th, 1917.
Dear Mrs. Bassett,—
As Sergeant Major of this section let me offer you my deepest sympathies for the loss of your brother. He will be very much missed by us all for he was a very popular boy. He always worked hard and well and we never had occasion to find fault with him or his work. From the Captain down we all feel alike the loss of him. For so young a boy I could not wish that some of the older men were as good. Again accept my sincere sympathy.
Yours sincerely,
A. F. BUTTON, Sgt.-Major.

Nov. 7, 1917.
Dear Mrs. Bassett,—
I am taking the liberty of writing you a few lines to sympathize with you in the loss of your brother. For over a year I was his Sergeant until I became Quartermaster Sergeant and I can truthfully say there never was a lad under me I liked better. He was always cheerful and jolly, no matter what the conditions. What is more he was one of my best and most reliable drivers. I always found him quite cool under difficulties and though he wasn't very large in stature he had the heart of a lion. He has died nobly for his country and what more can a man do. I attended his funeral this afternoon and I can assure you it was like losing one of my own brothers. He is buried in a quiet little cemetery along with other Canadian boys who have given up their lives also. In concluding this letter let me again offer you my most sincere sympathy. I remain, Yours sincerely,

D. U. GRANT, B.Q.M.S.
Nov. 9, 1917.
Dear Mrs. Bassett,—
I understand that Capt. Copland has written informing you of the sad fact that your brother has been killed and I am just sending you a line to express my own sympathy for you in your loss and to say how much I regret his loss. He died in the performance of his duty. That is as fine an epitaph as any man can have. He was buried with a comrade who was killed at the same time in a cemetery near here and the details of this, with the number of his grave, will be sent you in due course, as well as his personal effects. He was an excellent man, a good soldier. The officers directly over him have always spoken very highly of his work and he will be missed by us all.

Yours faithfully,
J. J. BENHALE, Lieut. Col. Com. I.C.D. 400.
Dear Mother and all,—
Last week I was at Mytchett taking my musketry course. I made first-class shot. Poor Harry could not see the target so did not make very good. When we came back to camp I was selected for a guard of honor to go to London next Friday to the Lord Mayor's show. Our division was picked to represent the Canadians in England. There is only 50 going. It is an honor to be selected out of 200,000 men and I sure feel it. We were issued with new uniforms and everything shining like silver. My friend in England sent me a lovely box a few days ago of cigarettes and cakes. Believe me, it is nice to have a friend near by.

Is a United Quebec? to Rule All Canada?

This, the most tremendous question in Canada's history, is to be answered within ten days.

Our answer involves Canada's honour, her freedom and her future. Old-time party questions are being advanced to obscure the gravest issue ever placed before a nation. Canada is in real danger. The clouds that obscure her vision must be brushed aside so that the great issue stands forth clear and distinct.

"Is a United Québec to Rule All Canada?"

To-day, in our national crisis, Quebec alone among all the provinces stands more united than ever before. She knows what she wants:

- (1) Withdrawal from the war.
- (2) Bilingual schools everywhere.
- (3) Weakening of the ties of British connection.
- (4) Political control of Canada.

From the Ottawa River to Labrador and the Gulf, a common purpose actuates Quebec in her determination to profit by the factional divisions of Canada and to impose her will upon all the people of Canada.

Within the last few weeks, Quebec has mobilized all her forces to dominate Canada under the unified leadership of Bourassa and Laurier. Canada knows that these two men in their earlier days were personal friends and political associates. Canada knows how in recent times they gradually drew apart—until in 1911 Bourassa opposed Laurier and helped to bring about his defeat, at the polls. Canada knows that from that time forward, until a few weeks ago, the breach between them steadily widened until envy and hatred, each toward the other became the possession of both. Bourassa and his followers were anathema to Laurier.

Should not the people of Canada ask themselves, before it is too late, why these two men have suddenly agreed to bury the past, why this sudden embrace each of the other? If we will but let the scales drop from our eyes the answer is obvious. The all-compelling influences of Quebec have combined to force the union of Laurier and Bourassa in the common purpose of French Canadian domination.

We concede the right of French Canadians to make common cause of anything they think it is in their interests so to do. This is a free country. But as the French Canadians have already combined to assert their views, it is the duty of the hour that we English-speaking Canadians get together and present to Quebec a united front in the defence of our rights. This is imperative.

With sixty solid seats Quebec is about to accomplish her designs. Bourassa, the real master and idol of Quebec, is in sight of his goal.

To attain her purpose, Quebec has not scrupled to ignore British traditions and to suppress freedom of speech. So thoroughly organized is her campaign to prevent even the discussion of the war that Unionist candidates are prevented from holding public meetings throughout that Province. The Unionist minority in Quebec are the victims of organized obstruction.

To be successful in her determination to rule all Canada, Quebec has but to secure a few seats in each of the other Provinces. Quebec leaders now seek to divide the rest of Canada into factions by insidiously bringing into political discussion old-time party questions, to divert the public mind from Quebec, her purpose and her ambitions.

United in her determination to quit the war, Quebec would compel a divided Canada to do likewise. By union only can the English-speaking people prevent this calamity.

However well-meaning Laurier candidates in Ontario may be, they will be helpless against a united Quebec.

Apart from the splendid work of the small English-speaking population, Quebec has failed the Red Cross, has failed the Patriotic Fund, has failed in recruiting and has failed in the Victory Loan. Dare we trust our soldiers, their wives, their children, their pensions and their allowances to Quebec, that will neither give, enlist nor invest, and which will resist taxation for the support of our men and their dependents?

Canada must decide whether she will become a deserter and quit with Russia, or fight to the end for liberty with Belgium. This decision must not be dictated by the only Province which has shirked its obligations throughout the war.

All Canada knows that Germany has been working through agents, spies and bribes in every country in the world. The latest evidences are the revelations recently made to the world by President Wilson. Do we Canadians think the Kaiser has overlooked Canada? If we do, what a fool's paradise!

Germany benefits by division among her enemies. Upon whom would she look in Canada as furthering her designs? Not Sir Robert Borden, Mr. Rowell and their colleagues in the Union Government. That is certain. But can the same be said with respect to the leaders in the Province of Quebec whose attitude in this war is against Canada's continuation in the war. We regret to be compelled to say these things, but we must not shut our eyes to facts.

The Citizens' Union Committee, anxious for the maintenance of British ideals and traditions, views with alarm the menace of French-Canadian domination with its inevitable influence upon the home, the school and the state.

We, therefore, call upon all English-speaking men and women to realize that—Canada, divided by political factions and old-time party questions, is at the mercy of a united Quebec. Union Government alone can save Canada from the menace of French-Canadian domination.

Final Appeal Judge Gives Ruling on Exemption of Farmers

Mr. Justice Duff (the Final Court of Appeal) Declares it is Essential that there shall be No Diminution in Agricultural Production.

(Published by authority of Director of Public Information, Ottawa.)

Hon. Mr. Justice Duff gave judgment on December 6th, in the first test case brought before him, as Central Appeal Judge (the final court of appeal), for the exemption of a farmer. The appeal was made by W. H. Rowntree in respect of his son, W. J. Rowntree, from the decision of Local Tribunal, Ontario, No. 421, which refused a claim for exemption. The son was stated to be an experienced farm hand, who had been working on the farm continuously for the past seven years, and ever since leaving school. He lives and works with his father, who owns a farm of 150 acres near Weston, Ontario. With the exception of a younger brother, he is the only male help of the father on the farm. The father is a man of advanced years.

In granting the man exemption "until he ceases to be employed in agricultural labor," Mr. Justice Duff said:

"The Military Service Act does not deal with the subject of the exemption of persons engaged in the agricultural industry; and the question which it is my duty to decide is whether the applicant being and having been, as above mentioned, habitually and effectively engaged in agriculture and in labor essential to the carrying on of agricultural production, ought to be exempted under the provisions of the Military Service Act.

"These two propositions are indisputable:

"(1) In order that the military power of the allies may be adequately sustained, it is essential that in this country and under the present conditions, there should be no diminution in agricultural production.

"(2) The supply of competent labor available for the purpose of agricultural production is not abundant, but actually is deficient.

"The proper conclusion appears to be that the applicant, a competent person, who had been habitually and effectively engaged in labor essential to such production, ought not to be withdrawn from it.

"It is perhaps unnecessary to say that such exemptions are not granted as concessions on account of personal hardship, still less as a favor to a class. The sole ground of them is that the national interest is the better served by keeping these men at home. The supreme necessity (upon the existence of which, as its preamble shows, this policy of the Military Service Act is founded) that leads the State to take men by compulsion and put them in the fighting line requires that men shall be kept at home who are engaged in work essential to enable the State to maintain the full efficiency of the combatant forces, and whose places cannot be taken by others not within the class called out."

Thompson is the Man

Monday the voters of East Hastings, by an overwhelming majority, elected a mandate to T. H. Thompson, Union Government candidate, in the war that ends war. To a certain extent the lines were broken down and the cry of "Union Government" and "Win the War Party" was heard, yet we are that the old party spirit, the party warfare that was the election here as well as elsewhere. For the time in the history of Canada the women bore a share in the election and for novices showed an adaptability to the game of party warfare that were an enjoyment in the game commensurate with their new-found liberties. That the contest is over, we at least show themselves to be sports and bury any feelings of differences of opinion as to the result in this contest by a vote. We call Canada's free press in every deed be so. We are pleased with the message sent to the boys across the great soul of Canada. The great soul of Canada has spoken wisely and let us all unite as one people in every way to carry this war to a successful issue.

Communication

Bellefleur, Dec. 11, 1917.
To the Editor of The Review.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly publish enclosed copy of letter received by me from Hon. Dr. Reid. While personally confident of the result in East Hastings, I felt that I would be a small sacrifice for the boys in the trenches who have fought and suffered and died so heroically for us. I have therefore withdrawn from the contest feeling sure that my friends who have so often helped me carry the flag to victory in the past will understand and approve of my conception of my duty in the present. Thanking them one and all for their kindness and confidence which my conscience would not allow me to run the risk of betraying through the possibilities of a triangular fight.

Yours sincerely,
W. B. NORTHRUP.
Office of the Minister of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Dec. 10, 1917.

Dear Mr. Northrup.—At Sir Robert's request I asked you to come to Ottawa to discuss the situation in East Hastings. Sir Robert expresses his deep concern with regard to the situation in Hastings and greatly fears that the constituency will be lost to the cause of Union Government if the two Union candidates remain in the field, and in order that the result in question may be beyond any question hopes that you may see your way to withdraw. He recognizes the great personal sacrifice you will make in retiring from the contest but in this crisis in the life of the Empire feels that you will be willing to withdraw from the fight. He will appreciate your action very much, as well as others who are in sympathy with the cause of Union Government. I personally feel the same way, and as Mr. Thompson has refused to consider the appeal I sincerely hope you will make the sacrifice, and I am sure if you do, as far as I am personally concerned, I shall never forget it. With kind regards, I am,
Yours faithfully,
J. D. REID.

DOMINION ELECTIONS Union Government Has Majority of 51.

ONTARIO SOLID FOR UNION

Quebec Is Only Province Supporting Laurier.

Loyal People of Canada Speak in No Uncertain Voice Regarding Description, and Only One Section of the Country Opposed the Sending of Support to the Boys.

The Canadian people endorsed Union Government by a majority that leaves no room for questioning their will to carry on the war to victory. The solid opposition of Quebec—only three Unionists were elected in the whole province, and these in English-speaking constituencies—the vote of the French elements in several Ontario ridings, backed up by the votes of all those whom the call of patriotism has left cold, were snowed under by the union of Conservatives and Liberals all over the country. Sir Robert Borden will go back to Ottawa with a majority of at least 51 members, which will be increased when the four deferred elections are held.

Ontario did its share by returning Union supporters in all but ten ridings, and in at least two of these the men elected as Laurierites—McColl, of Kent, and Duncan Ross, of West Middlesex, voted against their leader on conscription. But if Ontario did well, the West rallied to the standard of Unionism in a manner that was remarkable. West of the Great Lakes Sir Wilfrid Laurier won only two seats—Provencher in Manitoba and one in British Columbia. Saskatchewan returned 16 Unionists, Alberta 12, and British Columbia 10 or 11. The sweep was accompanied by tremendous majorities for the Unionist candidates. In the Western cities Laurier candidates fell thousands of votes short. In New Brunswick the Unionists have a margin of two to three seats.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN

Quebec did all that Sir Wilfrid Laurier expected of it. In fact, the Unionists won a seat less than they expected, but the two English-speaking Ministers, Hon. J. C. Doherty and Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, got through, as did Sir Herbert Ames, Outside of Montreal, however, not a Unionist was elected, both Hon. Mr. Blondin and Hon. Albert Sevguy being defeated.

It was a significant fact that with one or two exceptions, the ridings that Laurier carried in Ontario had either a strong German or French element. After the organized insult to Sir Robert Borden at Kitchener it was evident where the pro-Germans stood and the big majority rolled up for Laurier, the Laurier candidate, was no surprise. In South Perth also voters of German descent made their preference felt and South Bruce, which was won by Sir John Thompson, Laurier candidate, has two or three townships in which voters of German descent predominated. The loss of the Essex seats to Laurier candidates was a surprise. The seats won by the Laurier candidates in the Eastern townships were carried by the solidarity of the French-Canadian vote.

With one exception the endorsed candidates defeated independent Unionists, the exception being Brant, where Col. Harry Cockshutt, the soldier candidate, defeated John Harold, the Liberal-Unionist. An interesting win for Unionism was that of Fraser over W. M. German in Welland. Mr. German supported conscription, but he was nevertheless a strong Laurier partisan. He was regarded as unbeatable, but he fell over 500 votes short.

The four deferred elections—two in Halifax, one in Nelson, Manitoba, and the other in the Yukon—will increase the majority by four, all being regarded as safe Government constituencies. The returns from British Columbia were indefinite, but it appeared that only one Laurierite had been elected.

In a number of constituencies the vote will be affected by the soldiers' ballots. This is the case chiefly in Ontario constituencies, where the successful supporters of Sir Wilfrid Laurier had small majorities in almost every case. The khaki vote will probably swing several of these to the Government side of the House. One of the surprises of the election was the defeat of Sir Wilfrid in Ottawa, where Mr. A. E. Frapp won the seat from the Opposition leader by a safe majority. Of course Sir Wilfrid also has a seat in Quebec City, but he has usually carried several constituencies for his party in former contests. Hon. W. L. M. King was also among the slain, being defeated in North York by J. A. M. Armstrong by 557 votes.

Election over—what will the ladies find to talk about? A number of them went to McCoy's school-house to mark their ballot for Union Government.

Miss Herbertson and her cousin from Queensboro were Sunday guests of Mr. A. Graham and Mrs. W. West. Mr. and Mrs. Jaa. Rollins entertained some friends on Sunday.

Mrs. Sam Rollins and Mrs. Jaa. Long are canvassing the neighborhood in aid of Red Cross and are meeting with many willing to help in this work.

Mrs. W. T. Allan has been on the sick list for some time. Miss Ella Moore, of Rimington, is visiting here. Master Allan O'Brien is on the sick list.

The stork left a boy with Charley Hannah. Charley is all smiles. Mr. F. A. Reynolds is hauling lumber part way to assist his brother, John, who is building his barn up again.

Santa Claus will soon be around. I wonder how many are asking him to visit the boys in the trenches. Everybody think of them this year.

The Nichol Chemical Company of Hungerford has donated the sum of $500 to assist in purchasing equipment for the new High School at Tweed.

Gunner Percy Nayler left Kingston Friday for overseas. Percy is the third and last unmarried son of the Nayler family to enlist. Although advised by friends to apply for exemption, he indignantly refused to do so, but voluntarily left a new and growing business, a father and mother, now grown old, in order to do his bit in this great war for freedom and justice. Percy's business will be carried on under the management of Mr. Aymer of Toronto, who is an experienced and expert mechanic.

THE BLESSING OF A HEALTHY BODY

MR. MARRIOTT

"I think it my duty to tell you that
"Fruit-a-tives" has done for me.
Three years ago, I began to feel rundown and tired, and suffered very much from Liver and Kidney Trouble.
Having read of "Fruit-a-tives", I thought I would try them. The result was surprising. During the 31 years past, I have taken them regularly and would not change for anything. I have not had an hour's sickness since I commenced using "Fruit-a-tives", and I know now what I haven't known for a good many years—that is, the blessing of a healthy body and clear thinking brain."

Tasmanian Mammals.

There is a species of mammals in Tasmania the females of which lay eggs, from which the young are hatched like the young of birds. This mammal, the echidna, is perhaps of the lowest order of mammals, and is a kind of connecting-link between mammals and reptiles. They are about the size of a baby porcupine, and covered with strong spines not thickly all over their skins, and by way of a nose they have a slender and narrow beak of white horn. The echidna has very long sharp claws, with which it digs a deep burrow.
In this burrow it builds a nest for its young and deposits one or two eggs, which are enclosed in a strong fibrous shell three-fourths of an inch in length and two-thirds of an inch in diameter.

Poison Gas.

Poison gas, which for some time has been used in Europe with such deadly effect, is to be tried on one of the world's most unpopular insects—the African tsetse fly. An English officer stationed in a region that was once part of German East Africa, is responsible for the experiment. The gas to be used will be either of a nature destructive only to insect life and harmless to man, or else of a more deadly character, which must be handled by operators wearing gas masks.

My Limbs Would Twitch

And Waken Me—Unable to Rest or Sleep, I Walked the Floor in Nervous State—When Specialists Failed I Found a Cure.

This is the kind of cure that has set Windsor people thinking and talking about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.
The action of this food cure is so radically different to the usual treatment for the nerves that everybody wants to try it. Gradually and certainly it nourishes the starved nerves back to health and vigor and the benefits obtained are both thorough and lasting.

Mrs. M. Smithson, 37 Arthur street, Windsor, Ont., writes: "I was suffering from nervous breakdown, which was caused by a shock when fire broke out in the adjoining house. My nerves were in such a state that, after going to bed I could not get my nerves quieted down sufficiently to go to sleep. I used to get up and walk around the room, or go downstairs.
Even when I would be dropping off to sleep my limbs would twitch and jerk. I used to have cold, nervous night sweats, sometimes would become unconscious and lie that way for quite a little while. I was always cold and it seemed impossible for me to get warm or keep warm. When on the street I would see two or three objects at once, and did not want any person to speak to me or bother me.
Any little noise irritated and annoyed me very much. I had consulted specialists and tried many remedies during this time, but could not gain relief. At last I tried Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and before long could see that this treatment was proving of benefit. I am now feeling so much better that I can go out on the street without any difficulty, can go across the river and go about the same as usual. I sleep well at night, and am feeling more like myself every day.
I am pleased to be able to write you to tell you how much good the Nerve Food has done me. It has strengthened and built up my whole system.
I am recommending it to everybody
I am suffering from nervousness of any kind."

What the Christmas "Waits" Sing

SANTA CLAUS being about to desert the city streets for his annual reindeer ride over the roofs, the "waits" prepare to sing their centuries
old carols.

In several American cities has been revived the beautiful old custom of the "waits" going about from house to house singing the familiar old songs.
Light the Christmas candles in your window if you want them to stop before your home!

God rest you merry, gentlemen; let nothing you dismay—they will surely sing that, perhaps the best known of all old English carols.
And this too:

Hark! The herald angels sing,
Glory to the newborn king.

And, of course, "O Little Town of Bethlehem."

Perhaps, too, they will sing what is said to be the earliest known Christmas carol, dating from the Anglo-Norman days of the thirteenth century, which begins:

Lordings, listen to our lay—
We have come from far away To seek Christmas.

In this mansion we are told
He his yearly feasts doth hold;
'Tis today!

May joy come from God above
To all those who Christmas love.

This carol ends with the toast of those days:

"Here, then, I bid you all wassail, curse be he who will not say drink-hail."
"Wassail" meaning your health and "drink-hail" being the usual and courteous acknowledgment.

One of the best known of all the old carols, although not one of the oldest, was written by Nahum Tate in 1703 and is called the "Song of the Angels."
It begins:

While shepherds watched their flocks
by night,
All seated on the ground,
The angel of the Lord came down
And glory shone around.

Many are the carols in which B it-tles' ancient holly figures. "Tien drink to the holly berry," pledges one writer of songs, while another in "Under the Holy Bough" summons "All ye

Singing at the Doors.

who have scored each other or injured friend or brother, come gather here."

And then there's that grand old hymn
"Adeste Fideles," sung in every church in this land and in others, at this Christmas season:

Oh, come, all ye faithful,
Joyful and triumphant!

Come ye, oh, come ye to Bethlehem!

Christmas would not be Christmas, of course, if the "waits" were to neglect one other of the most beautiful of
old carols:

Holy night, peaceful night!
Through the darkness beams a light.

Holy night, peaceful night!
Through the darkness beams a light!

Yonder, where they sweet vigils keep O'er the babe who, in silent sleep,
Rests in heavenly peace,
Rests in heavenly peace.

If there are any of you who have in mind an after Christmas dinner evening of song to the accompaniment of a harpichord, a spinet, a lute or a piano or even the modern and much advertised disk machine, it might be well to try this on the company:

"Hark the Herald Angels Sing,"
Glory to the herald angels sing,
Glory to the newborn king;
Peace on earth and mercy mild,
God and sinners reconciled!

Rejoice, ye angels, rise,
Join the triumph of the choir,
Tell of His birth to Bethlehem, Glorify His name in Bethlehem.

Glory to the herald angels sing,
Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

Glory to the newborn king!

A Christmas Favorite

THE toys are so new jangled, with their little cranks and springs—
They make a fellow wonder how a boy can run the things;
You mustn't twist 'em that way an'
you mustn't jar or shake For fear you'll jolt their innards or a driven wheel will break.

But the jumpin' jack! He will wriggle
his knees
An' he'll hump his back just as gay as you please;
An' he don't wind up an' he don't run down,
An' his pants (a red an' his coat is brown;
He climbs the stick with a whack-tywhack!

Hooraah for the brave old jumpin' jack!

He isn't quite so stylish, an' he only costs a dime,
But he is lithe an' limber an' keeps busy all the time
A-bobbin' an' a-noddin' with a caper an' a hop—
A-bowin' you a thank-y when you jump him to the top.

Ho, the jumpin' jack! He will jiggle and prance,
An' he'll bend his back like he's doin'
a dance;
With his arms 'way up an' his legs
'way down,
An' his painted grin like a circus clown,
He slams around with a whack-ty-
whack—
Hooraah for the fine old jumpin' jack!

I reckon I'm old fashioned when it comes to Christmas toys,
But was there any finer thing when you an' me was boys?
Remember him a-grinnin' from your stockin' that-a-way,
All ready to go jumpin' up an' down
all Christmas day!

Ho, the jumpin' jack! He would wobble
his knees
An' he'd hump his back with aston-ishin' ease;
He would jump 'way up an' would sit
'way down,
An' he tickled us when he came to town.
He was best of all in old Santa's pack—
Hooraah for the good old jumpin' jack!

Former Resident Dies as War Prisoner

The following is taken from the Saskatoon Daily Star and refers to a former resident of Madoc:

J. A. McConnell, of 427 Ninth street, Saskatoon, has received word from the Director of Records that Lieutenant Clifford McConnell, previously reported wounded and missing, is now officially reported to have died of wounds while a prisoner of war on August 18, 1917.

LT. McConnell, who graduated in Arts from the University in the spring of 1916, left Saskatoon with the 190th Battalion and had been in France since last May. He was wounded and taken prisoner on August 10, and no further word had been received until the official telegram, dated December 4, arrived and informed his parents that he had died two days after being taken prisoner.

Besides his parents, there are left to mourn his loss two brothers, Howard and Douglas McConnell, barristers of Saskatoon and Biggar, and two sisters, Mrs. DeWitt Fletcher and Mrs. J. W. Pratt, of Vanscoy.

Youngest Barrister in Alberta

Some of our Review readers may appreciate hearing of another old Madoc boy, Harry A. White, coming forward in the professional world. He is a self-made man and in his twenty-fourth year. We find in the Edmonton Bulletin the following account of him:

Harry A. White, B.A., LL.B., was on Wednesday admitted to the Alberta bar by Mr. Justice Walsh. Mr. White is the youngest barrister in Alberta to-day took charge of the defense in a Supreme Court action immediately after his admission to the bar. The case was that of John Slivinski vs. Peter Kotelko et al. This is the only incident of its kind in the annals of the Alberta bar. In congratulating Mr. White Mr. Justice Walsh remarked that it was seldom that a man was admitted to the bar as a barrister and as a solicitor at the same time.

Mr. White was introduced by Frank Ford, K.C., and the oath was administered by George Henderson McLeod of the Supreme Court.

Seasons Greetings

We wish all our customers and friends a Happy Christmas.

Many of our homes have been made sad by the sacrifice their loved ones are making or have made on the battlefields of Flanders.

One of the members of this firm is sacrificing his life, and his last message was—that we convey to his friends his kindest regards and best wishes for their future welfare.

December Rod and Gun

Of particular interest is the December issue of Rod and Gun in Canada, which is already on the news-stand. Amongst the good things which this number offers are "A Naturalist's Christmas" by Bonnyville Dale; "In The Sky Pastures," a story of mountain goats and cougars in the Selkirk, by H. C. Haddon; "My Bob," a realistic story of a dog's experiences with his master on the firing line, by Vincent Perry; "The Jumper," a New Brunswick guide's story of the French river drivers of that Province, by Leslie Marvin Hayward; etc., etc. The Kennel department this month contains the list of awards given at the Western Dog Show at London and the New Brunswick Kennel Club Show at St. John. The other departments, notably, Fishing Notes, Game and Ammunition, and Along the Way, contain one that any Canadian sportsman will find of special interest. Rod and Gun is published at Woodstock, Ont. by W. J. Taylor.

On account of lack of tonnage space cannot now be shipped from Canada to England. There is said to be a 500-dozens of eggs in cold storage and the-e will be placed on the Canadian market for immediate consumption.

The bird was tethered near the spot where it thrived and grew very rapidly, and at the present time Mr. Dwyer says it weighs 253 lbs., and that Government officials who have examined it have been unable to name the species. CHAPTER III.

TEN MILLION DOLLARS RANSOM.

MR. GRAYMAN on the morning after the events already described waited long at the breakfast table, and at last, growing impatient, he sent to his daughter's room. It was empty! So the servant reported.

"Empty?" Mr. Grayman exclaimed. "What do you mean?"

"Miss Helen is not there, and her bed has not been occupied. We can find no trace of her or of Susan."

Mr. Grayman could not believe his ears. He was of a choleric temper, and he was in a rage.

"You idiot!" he said, brushing the girl aside. "I'll go myself and see."

He ascended to his daughter's apartment. In a few minutes he had convinced himself of the truth of the incredible report. Miss Grayman was not to be found, and neither her bed nor Susan's had been disturbed. He was absolutely stunned. His daughter, although of a romantic disposition, was most regular in her habits, and she had seldom spent a night out of the house when he was in it.

He treasured her as the apple of his eye. She formed the only bond between him and the world of sentiment. He never suffered her to be long out of his sight. In summer they went together to one of his country places, or to the mountains, or the seaside, or sometimes to Europe. That she should vanish out of his own house, from under his very eyes, was a thing beyond all possibility of belief. It simply could not be so. And yet it was so.

After the first half paralyzing shock produced by this tremendous fact Mr. Grayman became angry. He abused the servants who flocked, wondering, around Miss Grayman's door. When the housekeeper appeared, bustling to the rescue with an imaginary explanation of the disappearance half uttered on her lips, he lost all patience and chased her downstairs. Mr. Grayman, the great billionaire, noted for his coolness and his nerve, had almost gone mad. He had met his first check in thirty years and in a form that he could not endure.

The occurrence was so unprecedented that he could not think connectedly about it or about what to do. The butler was more clear headed than his master.

"I think it will be necessary to send for the police, sir," he suggested.

"The police?" cried Mr. Grayman. "What have they got to do with it? What do the police know about my daughter?"

"But—but, sir," stammered the man, "she may—she may have been carried off."

"Carried off? Who would carry her off, you fool? Who could carry her off here?"

"I don't know, sir. But she wouldn't have gone of herself, would she, sir?"

At this one of the maids, in whose hard, practical brain the butler's remark had struck the spark of an idea, said in an undertone to a companion:

"Could it have been that Lord Darnley? He was always hanging around her."

Mr. Grayman's ear caught the words. Now, this was something which might have been expected to anger him—the suggestion that his daughter would slope. But instead it simply shocked his mind back into a normal state. In an instant he had become master of himself and of the situation.

"Go about your duties," he said quietly in his ordinary tones. "We are making trouble about nothing. I had really forgotten what my daughter told me last night. I have been so over-pressed with business that it escaped me. She has not disappeared. I know where she is. It was only my forgetfulness. Think no more about it."

This was again the William Grayman who knew how to make billions. In a flash he had reached his decision. If his daughter had run away at the instigation of one of her suitors—a thing he did not yet believe—it was absolutely essential that the fact should be suppressed, at least until he knew all the circumstances. The idea of a forcible abduction did not occur to him. It would have appeared to his mind too absurd to be entertained.

Still, he felt that he needed the aid of the police, as the butler had suggested, but it must be secret aid. It must never be known—least of all to his servants. He, of course, had the means of securing secrecy, at least as far as secrecy is humanly possible, for money can shut as well as open all mouths. A million dollars would be a bagatelle to William Grayman if it guarded his family from scandal.

His mind was made up as to the action that he should take. In his ordinary manner, at his usual hour, he summoned his wife. Before leaving the house he called for the housekeeper.

"It was a little rude in my excitement this morning," he said to her, "and it was all so absurd. It was due to my forgetfulness, inspired by intense application to business. My daughter may be absent some time. She went away quietly with Susan last night to stay with some friends out of town, but her absence is so infrequent and I am so accustomed to seeing her at the breakfast table that the fact really slipped my mind in the midst of so many cares, and I made a needless scene, which I regret."

Grayman was almost a match for Captain Alfonso Payton in the perfect-

tion of his dissimulation, and the housekeeper solemnly accepted his statement.

Mr. Grayman rode to his office and immediately summoned Police Commissioner Braman by telephone. That official did not think it beneath his dignity instantly to answer a call to the office of William Grayman, a call that came from the billionaire himself.

When the commissioner arrived Grayman took him into his innermost sanctum and immediately astonished him beyond measure.

"Commissioner," he said, "my daughter disappeared last night from my house, and I want you to find out what has become of her."

The commissioner caught his breath. "Your daughter? Disappeared?" he gasped.

"Stop a moment!" said Grayman. "Understand that this is a profound secret and must remain so. I will make it worth your while to shut the mouth of every detective that you employ. No questions must be asked of the servants that could possibly lead them to suspect that an inquiry is on foot. They think that my daughter has gone away on a visit. You can draw on me for any amount at any time until the girl is found. Now, listen."

And Grayman proceeded to tell the story of the morning. When he had finished he asked in his blunt, automatic way:

"Now, tell me what you will do. What is your plan?"

The commissioner begged for a little time to think it over.

"I can have no plan yet," he said, "but I'll find one. With your permission I'll send a confidential man to your house and get a basis for further action."

"Very well," said Grayman, "let it be done. But remember my restriction. Not a word must escape anywhere—not a single word or hint."

The chief promised the most absolute secrecy and, with great perturbation of mind, returned in all haste to headquarters.

When Mr. Grayman was left alone his self command relaxed. His daughter was dearer to him than his fortune. He could not drive the agonizing thought of her strange disappearance from his mind. It unmanned him. He refused all callers, pretending to be too busy to see any one. It was the most uncomfortable morning he had ever spent.

Toward noon the wireless telephone bell in his sanctum rang sharply. Only his exclusive intimates ever called him up here. The apparatus was reserved for the secrets of high finance—secrets that could be trusted only to soundless ether. He put the receiver to his ear.

"Hello!" came a voice that he did not recognize. "Reply undirected."

This meant that Grayman should respond with a "hello" sent out by undirected waves, radiating on all sides, so that they would reach the original speaker whatever his location might be. This, as those who are familiar with the early history of wireless telegraphy know, was at first the only way in which messages could be sent, and many years were spent in fruitless efforts to direct them to definite places and thus prevent them from being picked up by Tom, Dick or Harry at all points of the compass. Fortunately all points of the compass were not so completely mastered, although the original method was still occasionally employed for special purposes, as in the present case. So complete, indeed, was the solution of the problem that wireless telegraph and telephone messages had already become as exclusive as by the ancient telegraph system. Each subscriber, as at the present day, had his synchronized instrument, duly numbered, which responded only to a limited set of waves, which might be compared with the characteristic spectral lines of a chemical substance, no confusion being possible. At need any receiver can be thrown open to take undirected and unsynchronized messages.

Accordingly Mr. Grayman, although greatly surprised that any of his confidential correspondents should summon him thus, replied in the manner indicated:

"Hello! What do you want?"

"William Grayman" came the response, interrogatively inflected.

"Yes."

"Himself—in person?"

"Yes."

"Very good. In the air."

This last phrase may also need a word of explanation. It is used to designate that the interlocutor is absent and that he either does not know or does not take the trouble to designate his position in the atmosphere by reference to some known point on the earth's surface.

"Who is it?" demanded Mr. Grayman.

"Captain Alfonso Payton."

"Who? I don't know such a person. Who are you? I can't bother."

"I am afraid, Mr. Grayman," interrupted the voice, "that you confine your attention a little too exclusively to the financial columns of the newspapers if you don't recognize my name. Yet I might well figure in them also. My transactions are frequently large enough, as you are going to find out. Most people know me as the sky pirate."

"What nonsense is this?" exclaimed Mr. Grayman impatiently. "How have you dared?"

"No nonsense at all, Mr. Grayman," the voice again interrupted, "and as for daring, listen. I took your daughter Helen from your house last night, and she, with her maid Susan, are here on my aero, the Chameleon."

Grayman's heart nearly stopped beating.

"What? What is that?" he exclaimed. "I have your daughter in my custody," the voice responded with distinct deliberation. "She is in no danger of any kind and will be in no danger provided that you accede promptly to the terms which I am going to give you. If you do not you will never see her again."

There was a cold, self confident, convincing tone to the voice that sent a shiver through the billionaire's nerves. He wiped the cold sweat from his brow with one hand, while with the other he clung to the receiver and pressed it to his ear. The strange voice went on, for he was incapable for the moment of interruption or reply:

"If you meet my demands she will that would break me, or do you think that my daughter is not worth it?"

Mr. Grayman's irritation arose from the remembrance of Payton's insolent tones as he had made the demand, and the commissioner winced at his angry glance. Then he begged pardon, explaining that such sums were unusual in his arithmetic. Mr. Grayman was mollified and proceeded to tell the story of the conversation by wireless.

"And now I think we've got him," he wound up.

"I'm not so sure," replied the commissioner, who had recovered his aplomb. "Alfonso Payton is the skillfullest crook alive. He gave you 'in the air' for location and told you to respond 'undirected,' didn't he?"

"He did."

"Well, he always does. You see, this wireless telegraph and telephone business is an enormously powerful lever in his hands. In former times kidnappers had to write letters, and letters can be traced, but Payton carries his victims off in a swift aero that nobody has ever been able to follow—a perfect which of a thing, according to all reports—and then he talks ransom with their friends from heaven knows where. He leaves no track and no clues in the air. I've never had to deal with him myself, for this is the first time that he has ventured into New York, but I've heard all about him from different parts of the country.

"He gave me a precise address where to meet him," said Grayman.

"And do you think you'll catch him there?"

"How can he, hope to get the money if he doesn't meet me?"

"Ah, I see that you are not up to the tricks of these crooks. Payton will watch the place from his aero like a hawk. If he sees any signs of a trap you might as well try to catch a bird by putting salt on its tail."

"What then? Would you have me tamely pay over $10,000,000 and not try to catch the wretch?"

"I don't say that," the commissioner responded thoughtfully. "But if it were an ordinary sum I might."

"Humph!" exclaimed Mr. Grayman. "Then you won't try to help me?"

"On the contrary, I will. But we have got to go to work with extreme caution."

"Tell me your plan, then."

"I've got no plan yet. It needs thinking over."

"Think quick, then, and you can name your price if you show me a way to get this infamous reprobate into my power. But before and above all I must have my daughter safe in my hands."

"That's just the difficulty. You have two days, you say. Tribes Hill is within four hours' journey by rail from New York. Give me until tomorrow to arrange my plan."

Mr. Grayman curbed his impatience and assented.

"Remember, absolute secrecy," he said.

"I shall remember," the commissioner replied. "Expect me tomorrow at noon, and if human ingenuity can trap Alfonso Payton I shall have him under lock and key within forty-eight hours."

Suppose the Review Ceased Publication

JUST suppose this community were left without a local newspaper! What would become of its local pride? Men and women might die, or marry, or go away, or suffer accident, or entertain friends, and you would hear about it all only through gossip. Farm sales and other announcements of interest in this particular part of Canada would have no publicity. Our local merchants would have no quick and cheap way of telling you what they provide for you. Our churches, schools and other institutions would have no medium of news or appeal.

The point is this:—If you kick against the subscription price, $1.50 per year, and drop your subscription, you say in effect: "This community doesn't need a local weekly." If you continue to take it, but "forget" to send or hand in the price, you do even worse.

"A Visit From St. Nicholas"

WHAT is the best known poem in the world? Not Gray's "Elegy," nor "The Raven," but "The Night Before Christmas." The author is not so well known as his poem. One recent Christmas the name of Clement Clarke Moore was honored as never before. Above his grave in the Chapel of Holy Trinity cemetery, New York, the choir boys sang carols on the night before Christmas, and a service of light was held. This beautiful ceremonial starts with a procession of torchbearers whose torches are kindled from the leader's flame, and as the line winds through the graveyard the fire is passed back from one to another until the lights grow in number and dispel the surrounding darkness.

The father of Clement Clarke Moore was once the bishop of New York.

"The Night Before Christmas" was published originally without the author's knowledge in the Troy Sentinel two days before Christmas, 1823. Moore had written it for the preceptor Christmas just for the delight of his own children, but its circulation slipped beyond the family circle, and an unknown friend sent it for publication. The Sentinel readers paid no attention to it, and it passed without comment until seven years later, when the same paper reprinted it. The second reception was very different from the first. "A Visit From St. Nicholas," as it was then entitled, was copied broadcast, and its author awoke to find his work, if not himself, famous.

Although Clement Clarke Moore was educated for the ministry, he never took orders. For the greater part of his life he was identified with the New York General Theological seminary, being professor of Biblical learning and Greek and later of oriental languages.

Clement Moore's family life had many sorrows. His wife died at the early age of thirty-five, and the two little daughters, for whom he wrote "The Night Before Christmas," both died in their childhood. His son and namesake lived to the age of sixty-eight and is buried in the family plot.

When "The Night Before Christmas" was first published in the Troy Sentinel the editor wrote:

"We do not know to whom we are indebted for the following description of that unwearied patron of children, that homely but delightful personification of parental kindness, Santa Claus, his custom and his equipage, as he goes about visiting the dwellers of this happy land, laden with Christmas bounties, but from whomsoever it may have come we give thanks for it. There is in our apprehension a spirit of genial goodness in it, a playfulness as of fairy and a benevolent elasticity to enter into the feelings and promote the simple pleasures of children which are altogether charming. We hope our little patrons, both lads and lassies, will accept it as a proof of our unfeigned good will toward them, a token of our earnest wish that they may have a merry Christmas; that they may long retain their beautiful remembrance of these unthought, home bred joys, which derive their flavor from filial duty and fraternal love and which, they may be assured, are the least alloyed that time can furnish them."

The "Service of Light."

Christmas Song.

O, Christmas is a happy time,
When human hearts are right
And human hate have vanished
And all the world looks bright!

And Christmas is a solemn time,
For each long, long ago,
Christ was born to give the world
The joy that we now know.

And on the eve of Christmas time
In hush and awe and cheer
We tell of Jesus' birth and life
And how he came to save us here.

Brazil Gives Strength To Cause of the Allies Among Latin Republics

BRAZIL was the eighteenth nation to declare war on Germany. Her actual entry into the conflict, after much hesitation, has been hailed with wide satisfaction, not so much because of what she can do as a combatant—though that is by no means negligible—but rather for its moral effect and the example set to other South American countries.

Brazil's action was not hurried; she went in because she could no longer stay out, just as the United States did. And she speaks for the southern hemisphere as the United States speaks for the north. The New York Times said:

"Brazil is as pacific as we are, and was as reluctant to enter the war. The abstract question of the nature of the war was settled for Europe when we entered it. So, too, Brazil has settled the question of our disinterestedness and the accuracy in speaking for the American hemisphere. She enters the war, as we did, because she must. It is necessary for the salvation of freedom on the western continents."

The World noted in comment on Brazil's declaration that "one by one the former neutral nations in every quarter of the globe have ranged themselves against the common enemy. By universal verdict Prussianism has been sentenced to death."

One remarkable feature of Brazil's attitude is emphasized by The Philadelphia Inquirer, which said, in recording the plan to send a Brazilian commission to confer with the Washington authorities, that Brazil would ask for no loan from the United States, adding—

"This is as unexpected as it is agreeable. The hat has been handed Uncle Sam so often that he is getting used to it. If Brazil really needed money she could have it. South Americans feel assured that going into war will be the cause of a new awakening of public spirit in Brazil."

Brazil includes nearly half the territory and about half the population of South America. Her resources, though but partially developed, are enormous. In an interesting article by Admiral Deming published in The Philadelphia Ledger, it is asserted that while her efficient trained forces are now only about 150,000 men, she could raise a force of 1,785,000 for her army. But her contribution will rather be in food, lumber, and other supplies. The St. Louis Post Dispatch summed it up under the caption, "Bully for Brazil," as follows:

"Brazil can do much toward pushing the war to a successful conclusion. With forests whose area is one-third that of Europe, she can supply timber to build ships, and wood to eke out the coal supply of the Allies. She can furnish rubber in abundance, many necessary drugs and dyes. She has ores and sulphur. Her cotton, coffee, and sugar production are already great and can be expanded. She can help feed the forces of democracy. Ranking second among the South American republics commercially, with an estimated population of 25,000,000, Brazil's accession to the Allied ranks will certainly have weight even with German statesmen who have hitherto been defiant."

The Monks and the Silkworm.

About the year 552 two Persian monks stole furtively out of China with scanty luggage, but treasuring out on foot and made their way from China into Europe. In that came were a multitude of the eggs of the silkworm moth, which the monks had stolen. They carried them to Constantinople.

When the time came for the hatching of the eggs the monks tended the little caterpillars, fed them on the leaves of the mulberry, took their cocoons when they spun, and from them derived the first silk produced in Europe. Silk had for centuries before been a treasure of China, and its manufacture, like the insects which produced it, was jealously guarded.

The monks, while on a missionary enterprise to China, had witnessed the whole process of silkworm-rearing and the manufacture of silk.

THE LATE GLEN CAMPBELL.

Notable Westerner Who Died Serving His Country.

In stature and personal characteristics, Colonel Campbell was typical of the finer class of pioneer frontiersmen, and his tall, picturesque figure was familiar to the people of Winnipeg. He was a magnificent horseman, a splendid rifle shot, and a man who did not know what fear was and withal was a man of generous impulses, a hard fighter, but quick to forget and forgive.

The death of Lieut.-Colonel Glen Lyon Archibald Campbell removes another of the few remaining men typical of the pioneer days of the west. Born in the west, where the country was still given over to the chase and the fur trade, he was a true son of the frontier, possessing all those fine, many characteristics that marked the pathfinders in the regions beyond the pale of civilization—courageous, warm hearted, and generous to a fault, with a remarkable faculty for making and retaining friends among all classes.

Colonel Campbell was a son of the late Robert Campbell, a chief factor of the Hudson Bay Company, who discovered the Yukon river and established trading posts in the heart of the Yukon territory. He was born at Fort Pelly, Sask., on Oct. 23, 1863, and as a small boy was sent to Scotland where he received his education at Glasgow academy and Merchiston Castle school, Edinburgh. On returning to Canada he made his home with his father at Fort Pelly for a time, and then went to Montana, where he spent several years on a cattle ranch for the purpose of learning the stock-raising business, in which his father was taking an interest. He subsequently established a stock farm in the Riding Mountain, near Gilbert Plains, where he since, and where his farming and stock-raising enterprises were very successful.

In 1892 he was induced, much against his will, to contest Gilbert Plains riding for a seat in the Manitoba Assembly. He was unsuccessful on that occasion, and again in 1896, when he ran for a second time. In 1902 he was again a candidate and was elected, and was returned in 1907 by acclamation. In the following year he resigned to contest Dauphin riding for the House of Commons and was elected, and sat in the Federal House until the elections of 1911. In 1912 he was appointed chief inspector of Indian Affairs for Canada, and was incumbent of the position up to the time of his death.

In 1885 he served with Boulton's Scouts through the North-west rebellion, and has the distinction of being raised from the ranks to a captaincy on the field. When the European war broke out he was anxious to do his bit, and his offer to raise a western battalion was gladly accepted by the military authorities at Ottawa. In a few weeks he completed the strength of Colonel Clingan's Brandon battalion, the 79th, in which he held the rank of major. This was a thoroughly western corps, rank and file being all splendid specimens of sturdy manhood.

Owing to the success attending his efforts in helping to raise the 79th, Major Campbell was promoted to a lieutenant-colonelcy and asked to organize another battalion, the 107th. His personal popularity was such that enlistment was rapid and he soon had his second battalion over strength. He took this battalion overseas.

In England it was made a pioneer battalion, was sent to France as a complete unit out of deference to Colonel Campbell's request and on account of the battalion comprising such a uniformly fine lot of well-trained, useful men.

Colonel Campbell was loved by his men and they were ready to follow him anywhere, because they knew he would not ask them to go where he would not go himself. It is said that he knew every man in his battalion by name, and took a personal interest in them all.

For some years past Col. Campbell suffered from a serious internal malady, and he submitted to a couple of operations which, while affording temporary relief, failed to effect a complete remedy. He was seriously ill before going overseas, and friends endeavored to persuade him not to go, but having made up his mind that he was going to see the thing through to a finish he said he would never be satisfied until he faced the Boches in the front-line trenches. After reaching England he had to go into hospital on account of his complaint, but immediately on being discharged he hastened to France to join his regiment, and he was with his men constantly until his fatal illness. It is thought that the strenuous work in the trenches aggravated the disease from which he suffered, and that he was too much worn to further resist its encroachments.

VOTING AT THE FRONT.

One Poll Clerk Wounded While Guarding Ballot Boxes.

CANADIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, Dec. 18.—No less than 87 per cent. of the total vote of the Canadian corps had been polled by 8 o'clock Friday night. Some units have already polled one hundred per cent. of the ballots, while the general experience is that the majority of men refusing to exercise the franchise is almost negligible in specific units, although the aggregate may be appreciable.

The election officers have taken their boxes with them on the trainways behind the lines, and have voted men as they worked. In the same way they have gone through the front-line trenches, giving men in the firing line their opportunity to exercise the franchise. One poll clerk has been seriously wounded, a presiding officer has been sent down to the base as a casualty, while one gunner voting beside his gun was hit by shrapnel.

Polling booths have been damaged by shell fire and by bombs, but there has been no serious interruption to the election work, and, above all, no interference with the actual war operations.

Tribunal on the Carpet.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 18.—As a result of a series of alleged irregularities, action has been taken to remove the members of St. Boniface Tribunal No. 71. Acting on order of the Department of Justice, E. R. Chapman, registrar for Manitoba, has made a long affidavit to show how this tribunal has disregarded instructions.

The members of the tribunals are Magistrate C. Henri Royal, of St. Boniface and ex-Ald. Jos. A. Cusson.

Unidentified Bodies Will Be Buried. HALIFAX, Dec. 18.—Dr. W. D. Finn, the medical examiner, has issued a notice that all unidentified bodies at the Chaboult mortuary (not identified by Sunday night at 10 o'clock) will be buried.

Sanitary conditions at the morgue are in perfect order and no danger of contagion exists.

pool shaded by overhanging rocks. In a moment she had her rod at work and a tiny fly rippled the surface of the water. She tried again, but this time it caught in the bushes. The next time her patience was rewarded, and a fair sized trout lay beside her on the bank.

"Not so bad," rejoined Jeanette. "I wish Arthur could see you." She tried several nearby pools with no success, then the line and fly became hopelessly entangled in a tree. In despair she slipped into the low branches of a nearby scrub apple tree and with a long stick was trying to pull the line from the branches of the other tree when it slipped from her hand and fell with a crash. She heard a sudden rustle and, almost lost her balance. A young man was standing in the brush behind her, red in hand, his line entangled with hers, and looking at her in surprise.

"What?" he began, then stopped. "Were you going to say, 'What am I doing in this tree?' I'll tell you what I was trying to do. Did my stick hit you?" Jeanette paused for want of breath.

"It did. It hit my arm with that result," and the young man waved his hand toward the tree full of lines. "But what were you doing in the tree? It is a good thing you made yourself known or you might have heard some language. There is a trout in that pool. Just one, that I have tried for every day for a week on every fly I possess, but I can't stick his taste. He's a mighty particular old gentleman. But I am bound to have the old chap if I have to devote my entire vacation to the job."

"Oh, I'm afraid I have your trout!" Jeanette exclaimed. "Look!" and she held the trout up for his inspection. "Try! Jove! Did you get him out of that pool? If you did, he is the same old boy. I'm glad to know he is caught. It takes a load off my mind. Would you mind showing me the fly he took?"

"Not at all, but I can't. The fly is in the tree," and Jeanette pointed to where the two lines hung in the branches overhead. In another moment they were both at work disentangling the lines.

"There! The trick is done. Is that the fly he took? It would have been about my last guess," he said. "By the way, I have a few small trout, and I'm as hungry as a bear. What do you say to cooking them and eating them on the spot? I know you don't live in the village, but from what you say you must be visiting there. I'm Deacon Alden's nephew, Stephen Alden, and if you are visiting relatives you are probably a second or third cousin of mine. You know about every one is related in a village of this size, so everything will be perfectly proper. Come on, cousin, let's get luncheon," and he laughed with such boyish good nature and good will that Jeanette laughed also.

"You certainly sound respectable. I'll add my trout and sandwiches to yours. You make a fire and I'll cook the trout."

The thought of food brought the babies to Jeanette's mind. Would they give Bobby the right food and the baby's milk? But she resolutely put them out of her mind and tried to have the "good time" that she would have had before the advent of Arthur and the babies.

Stephen Alden was having a good time and a "good feed," and he rattled on in a happy, care-free fashion.

In spite of herself, Jeanette answered rather absentmindedly. How had she happened to forget that cost of Arthur's? It should have gone to the cleaner's that morning.

She answered a question about a recent novel so vaguely that the young man looked at her in a puzzled way. "Probably not much of a reader," he thought. "She's a mighty pretty girl and a good little companion. I didn't find a bit about smoke or buzz, and she can fish. I'll try her on something else."

"Oh, dear," thought Jeanette. "I'd forgotten what stupid things I used to like to talk about. Tennis, ball games, dancing, were all very well, but how I would like to get hold of those blessed babies. I simply can't stand it."

"I really must be starting now for home," she began, gathering up her things. "It's been very nice and jolly and thanks for getting me out of the mess I was in. No, you must not leave your fishing. I'm not far from home," and she left so abruptly that Stephen Alden wondered what he could possibly have said to offend her.

As she came into the village she saw people hurrying along the street. "What is all the excitement?" she called as two boys ran past her.

"Been an accident. Baby run over by an automobile. The yellow haired kid what belongs to them city folks. Guess he's killed," called the boy.

Killed! Her little Bobby, whom she had left such a short time ago. Oh, where was Arthur! If she could only get to him this nightmare would go. Why hadn't she realized sooner what Arthur and the babies meant to her? How could she have ever thought for one minute that it would be fun to go back to those meaningless, pleasureful girlhood days? If she had only known as she knew now! If she had only been at home this dreadful thing couldn't have happened.

She never knew how she reached her front gate. She saw her husband in the crowd. "Arthur," she cried. "Baby!" he could get no further. "He was at her side in an instant. "Jean, dear, it isn't Bobby. Look, he is on the porch. It is another little fellow, but he is not much hurt. Where have you been, Jean?"

"Arthur, just take me to my babies." Later that evening she made her confession of the momentary discontent to her husband, but she added, "the cure, I am sure, will be a permanent one."

An Official Story-Teller. In several of the public libraries of Canada story-telling to children has for some years been a special feature. Each Saturday morning from fifty to one hundred children assemble at the library in a room set apart for the purpose and called the "Children's Room." The ages of the children vary from six to fourteen years. At St. John, New Brunswick, story-telling has been continued now for three years. This year it has been found advisable to divide the children according to age and to hold two classes of half an hour each. The work has steadily grown in interest, and the demand for books of a less trivial type justify the work of the committee in charge. During the summer, when opportunity of a story-teller of note is a guest of the city, notice is given to the library, and it is often possible to have a special session.

Jeffre Admires Canadians.

The Prime Minister has received the following cablegram from Sir George Grey, acting High Commissioner for Canada in London: London, Oct. 8, 1917.

Prime Minister, Ottawa: The Canadian Military Mission called on Marshal Jeffre this morning to pay their respects to the victor of the Marne. The Marshal said he was all the more pleased with their visit, as the memories of the events recorded him in Montreal while M. Viviani was being proclaimed in Ottawa, were still fresh in his mind. He expressed his admiration for the part played by the Canadian army in the war, adding: "I am just a soldier. I do not know anything about your politics. I am positive, however, that in Canada, as in all the other Entente countries, it is realized by all that in this fight against the assassination of Belgium and Serbia every civilized man must bring his maximum effort to bear." (Signed) Percley.

New Citizens.

Over 2,000 agriculturists from the United States have settled on the grain-fields of Western Canada since January 1st of this year.

The Crops of Quebec.

The Bureau of Statistics of the province has issued an estimate of the yields of grain crops in Quebec in 1917. The figures are:

	Bushels.
Wheat	3,922,000
Oats	33,988,000
Barley	2,212,000
Rye	462,000
Pear	287,000
Beans	241,000
Blackwheat	2,022,000
Flaxseed	62,000
Mixed grains	3,070,000

The preparation of these statistics in so full a form is a new activity of the administration of the province; and it may take some time and experience to secure the approximation to accuracy which issue that is to be expected in connection with crop estimates. As the records stand they show a grain production of about 50,000,000 bushels, of which over three-fifths is oats. The wheat yield is under 4,000,000 bushels, and is probably about one-quarter of the consumption of the province. The statistics of the bureau would indicate that the acreage under wheat has increased somewhat in recent years, the yield in the late past having been estimated at between one and two million bushels a year. Quebec was at one time a considerable grower of wheat, both of the winter and spring varieties. As in other parts of the continent, however, many of the farmers exhausted the capacity of their soils and had to take to other branches of culture to make a living. The greater production now claimed may be evidence of improvement in methods as well as extension of the area under cultivation. The province has long been a large oat-growing district. In comparing Quebec's production with that of provinces to the west it is remembered that this province is under some climatological disadvantages which make harder the work of the advanced agriculturist. In recent years, also, grain growing has been giving way in many districts, in both the eastern and western divisions, to dairying and stock raising, with highly profitable results; and at the last industrial fair at Toronto Quebec dairymen took more than a proportionate number of the awards for excellence.

MADOC, DECEMBER 27, 1917

too much of himself to be a coward. As to the German, his phlegmatic temperament undoubtedly has rendered him a service in many a tight place. If he does not become sufficiently excited to execute a brilliant charge, he is also not so likely as some others to lose his head and run away. He is apt to stay where he is put.

English coolness is proverbial. In every emergency of life, from a railroad accident to a battle, the Englishman keeps his feelings carefully concealed. He may really be more afraid than the phlegmatic German, but his greatest dread is that anybody should know it. For Russia, "impassibility" perhaps "stolidity" should be substituted, for there was a time, although it is hard to realize it in view of recent developments, when Russian soldiers evinced utter indifference to danger amounting virtually to fatalism. The peasant troops apparently proceeded on the principle that their lives belonged to the Czar and they had little concern as to what became of them. Byron's reference to the Italians is significant in the light of what they have been doing in this latest chapter of the war. They seem indeed to have been moved finally to righteous anger against their Austrian foe. When the Italian's courage flames up it is difficult to extinguish: He does not easily forgive or forget his wrongs and injuries, and the long-pent-up feelings which he has held toward Austria are now finding emphatic expression. The Italian possesses not merely the dash and brilliancy of the French; he is urged on by an implacable desire to "get" his enemy and never rests until he has accomplished his object. That is why Austria may yet tremble.

A Prophecy Come True.

Only seven years ago M. Bloch, the great Russian banker, wrote: "That is the future of war—not fighting, but famine; not the slaying of men, but the bankruptcy of nations, and the breaking up of the whole social organization of the nations."

The future of war, as written about by M. Bloch seven years ago, is the present of war to-day. Not that fighting and the slaying of men are lessened. Only the Napoleonic and the Thirty Years' wars approach to-day's war in the terrible losses of human life, and too great a drain on the human life of any one or several of the nations engaged may be the deciding factor in the war's conclusion. But on the whole, and as matters stand to-day, that part of M. Bloch's prophecy referring to the predominant influence of the food problem in modern war is thoroughly borne out by the facts. Despite the fearful and fatal struggling of an incredible number of men, consuming inconceivable quantities of munitions, and using such amazing methods of fighting as are beyond even the fantastic imaginings of the romancers of a decade ago, the national and international phases of the food and general economic problem are the predominant features of the war situation to-day.

China Awakening.

Here then is the situation: China is ruled by force; as yet there is not, in governmental circles, any considerable recognition of constitutional rights; but from below there is an almost imperceptible but unmistakable stirring on the part of the people, who are beginning to conceive of themselves as a part of it all.

A mighty nation is gaining political compactness and momentum. There is no immediate danger of its power being felt outside of its boundaries. But surely and slowly China is moving toward something. It may be trust in militarism and a consequent need for military preparations on a vastly enhanced scale. Or it may be a breath of true democracy and sense of responsibility to uphold the rights of mankind. For the people are awakening, and this awakening can be put to rule by force or an amendment of rule by the will of the majority.—Maynard Owen Williams, in The Christian Herald.

Modern Gaza.

In almost every particular the modern Gaza is an Egyptian rather than a Syrian town. It is full of rich vegetation, and its many glistening minarets show up against the dull green of its innumerable olive-trees. Gaza is still, as of old, a place of trade, of camels and caravans, and its bazaars are loud with traffic and filled with merchandise.

ORIGIN OF ESKIMOS.

Traced Musically by Christian Leden, Explorer.

Primitive music hitherto has been little regarded from the standpoint of racial history. Such facts as have been gathered about tribal rhythms and melodies have been much exploited as material for the composition of exotic-sounding pieces for the modern concert hall, but they have been little applied to the comparative study of lost or disappearing civilizations. If some traveler to-day discovers a folk tune in Abyssinia, inevitably some composer to-morrow will write an "Abyssinian" intermezzo for full orchestra, with a number of new instruments added. If an antiquarian goes into the back country of Peru and brings out a strange melody from the mountain people, a musician is sure to seize upon it at once as the theme of an aria for an Inca opera.

Breaking away from the idea that the present use of a folk tune is what counts for most, Christian Leden, the Arctic explorer, has investigated Eskimo music in Greenland with the purpose of learning its past significance.

Starting with the idea that the origins of a race can be studied as well through music as through spoken lore, he has taken phonographic records of Eskimo singing as he has heard it under both domestic and ceremonial conditions. The way that a people expresses itself in music does not change so much, according to him, as does its way of expressing itself through other forms of culture. The Eskimos of the present time, as he has noted his theories to reviewers, have the same manner of vocal delivery, the same way of putting a stress on a note, and the same method for constructing a melody that their ancestors had centuries ago.

Going on the theory that races have permanent traits of voice rhythm and tune, Mr. Leden has compared his records of Eskimo singing with his own and other travelers' records of American Indian singing; and he has come to the conclusion that the Eskimo tribes of Greenland and the Indian tribes of both North and South America have a common ancestry. In fact, he holds that he has found a strong argument showing the Eskimos to be descendants of American Indians who were driven northward perhaps thousands of years ago and who have since remained isolated there.

One of the peculiarities which the explorer, talking informally with journalists, has mentioned as common to Eskimo and American Indian singing is a sliding, or glissando, accent of important phrases. There are other details which he has submitted to ethnologists. He has yet to make a complete popular presentation of his researches.

Canada's Fixed Determination.

We in Canada have been at war for over three years and we are weary. The strain has been great; the sacrifices have been terrible. We have given in blood and human suffering and the anguish of bereavement; we have given in gold and toil and effort. We need rest, and we want rest, but, if I know the spirit of Canada, we will not take rest until the war is ended and victory is achieved.

Up to now we have done well. We have enlisted about 400,000 men, equal in proportion to 5,000,000 from the United States. If in striking the proportion we should omit the French-Canadian population and the French-Canadian enlistments, it would be equal to 7,000,000 men from the United States. We have raised about a billion of dollars, which, on the basis of the wealth of the two nations, would be equivalent to some forty billions from the United States. We have produced huge quantities of munitions. We have kept up the production of our farms and our factories. But if we are to continue the full performance of our duty, it must from now on be under government direction and government compulsion.

We have said again and again that we were in this war to the last man and the last dollar. We have said this clearly and boldly; we have not qualified it by saying to the last voluntary man, to the last willing dollar. There are timid men and timid dollars; if we are to use them we must take them; it is not enough to invite them and say that they will be welcome.—Atlantic Monthly.

Getting Out of the Rut.

The merchant who conducts his business according to the method of the last century is not giving his customers the service they are entitled to. The spirit of the new century is to do more than to merely turn goods over at a profit. It is to really earn that profit by giving real service, accommodation and reliable advice. The modern merchant must know his goods thoroughly and what is best adapted to every household requirement.

That class of merchant invariably advertises. That is the one sure test of his being abreast of the times.

Why Not Church Union Also?

The Tweed News is on the right track. To the press of Canada is to a great degree due the initiative and the successful carrying out of political unionism. We believe the same power, if directed with the same energy and sincerity of purpose towards sectarian unionism, would produce a measure of success, but it is idle to expect the forces that brought about religious disunion to ever bring union.

Tweed News:—The Tories and the Grits set about it and they decided to unite and they made a great success of it, didn't they?

The Methodists, the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists have been wasting a lot of time and chin energy on the question of union and haven't got very far on the road yet. Now they should take a leaf out of the Union Cabinet and get busy.

And, by the way, since union is such a live issue and promises such great things, why may we not have a real Union Church?

In the election just closed high dignitaries in the Roman Catholic church, the Methodist church, the Presbyterian church, the Anglican church, the Baptist church, the Jewish church, the various churches, all forgot for the time their silly little "isms" and other ecclesiastical clap-traps and joined hands in the win-the-war contest and they exerted a mighty influence.

Men are saved only by and through the birth, life, work, sacrifice, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace and it will be a great day for this old world when men and women the world over will worship at a common altar.

How can we, in the name of the Christ-gospel justify all this unnecessary overlapping of sectarian effort and waste of human energy and money?

Just the other evening a missionary, pleading for help in the mission fields, stated that in her field there was but one person in reach of the gospel to a million souls hungering for the Bread of Life, while right here in Tweed we maintain five men to minister to the needs of probably fifteen hundred souls.

There's union in the trenches, in the death lines of the struggling Empires, why shouldn't there be union back of the trenches?

To the Potato

I knew you when I was a kid and hear unto my voice, for thou above all other things are favoured in my choice I pray thee, as in dizzy heights, thou soarest in the skies, to look upon my humble self from out thy wondrous eyes. Now don't go hangin' any bluff that you don't know my name, nor nothin' of the village lot from whence I sprang and came nor don't you get so darn stuck up that you won't speak to me, or else I'll get my dander up and shoot harpoons at thee. I knew you when I was a kid and made pies out of mud, and then, by heck, you know right well we used to call you spud. You weren't of much account them days, you weren't so very fine, we used to take your little squibs and toss 'em to the swine. And then when I'm at this, I'll triu you to a peak, for I don't care a hoot just now if you don't care to speak—I used to take a poison can and squirt it on your legs, for you was always troubled with some forty kinds of bugs. There ain't a bit of reason for your conceit, by heck, because you're fetchin' these here days about one bone a peck. Why, say, you s'abby, sproutin' wart, you make me good and sore, but I can mind when folks who ran the corner grocery store, would take you every bloomin' time they sent an oil can out and jam you as an ornament upon the oil can spout. So you don't need to get stuck up, and throw on lots of style, because you've got a start of me that looks most like a mile. For things will change, the time will come you'll grovel in the mud, and folks once more will snort at you and call you scabby spud.—Ark in fuelnel Mercury.

Elections in June Next

Daily Ontario—Now that the flurry and excitement of the federal election has passed, talk about the situation in Ontario for the local House begins.

This Government's term of office is up next June, and unless there is an extension of the life of the Parliament there will have to be an election in Ontario, when the next session is over. It is not at all likely that there will be an extension, judging from the talk at present.

CONTROLLING RIVER FRESHETS
A Subject of Vital Importance to Western Ontario.
Mr. Brethaupt, a well-known Canadian civil engineer, has given much time and thought to the problem of controlling destructive fresh-ets on the Grand River and other streams that flow on the empty plateau of Ontario, or rivers that permeate the lakes or rivers that extend continuously from Kingston to Collingwood. The conclusions at which he has arrived, as the result of his personal observations and surveys, refer entirely to the Grand River, but, with necessary adaptation, his conclusions would apply to several other streams that rise on the same plateau and radiate to the St. Lawrence system in different directions: the Thames, Maitland, Saugon, Sydenham, Beaver, Nottawasaga, and Credit. All of these rivers operate in draining the freshet water from the plateau with great rapidity, leaving it disastrously arid, while the accumulated waters are destroying wetlands, dams, and buildings in their rushing descent to the level of the lakes.

Speaking of the Grand River, Mr.
Brethaupt says, the most that can be achieved is "retardation" of the waters by checking them with small dams built at suitable spots on the tributary streams. These would have an effect analogous to that of the logs and other debris that held back the water when the country was forested, and when beaver dams were numerous. The more of such artificial dams there are the greater the amount of retardation, and the less the total of freshet destruction.
The effect in ameliorating the climate of the plateau by retaining so much retarded water must be quite appreciable, and the larger the amount of it the greater the effect of the water on the air over the whole plateau. Before the advent of the modern drainage, which are mostly built up of logs, held much water back. Arterial drainage has destroyed many of them, and this is another reason for holding up artificially the equivalent of the water that has been artificially and pre-judicially carried away. According to Mr. Brethaupt much benefit has already resulted from local works;
it is worth considering whether the whole problem is not of sufficient importance, and difficulty to be taken up as a provincial enterprise.

The Home Town.
Most people grow up with the home-town feeling for the old town
—the town where they were youngsters, where they knew every kitten and puppy, every street and every alley, every crooked barrel and every crazy corner, everybody and everything, at least for many a block around. It was not, of course, a feeling of which you were unconsciously conscious, as likely as not you never knew that you had it until you came back after a summer in the country, or, perhaps, came home from school for the holidays. It was then that the home-town feeling grew large within you—a fine, big, warm feeling.

If it happened that you lived in a medium-sized town in those days, the light of the station was a deeply satisfying thing. It seemed, as you rattled along in the little old hack, past the courthouse square and across the one-street car line, that you had come back to yourself—a very comfortable sort of feeling indeed.

Perhaps you lived in or near a much smaller village, but it was the same home-town feeling you had as you climbed under the heavy, horse-smelling robe into the buggy and rode down the street. The general store, the white church, the brick house where the one rich family lived, and the patched-up cabin where the one poor family lived were so familiar to you that you were immediately conscious of every new sign in the store window and every new patch in the cabin roof. And if, perhaps, you lived in a much larger town, the distant smoke, and the insistent clamor, the crowds, and the rush of traffic were the things you were looking for and the things that satisfied the home-town feeling.

Pork Exports.
The sacrifice that Canada is making to supply the Allies with food is illustrated in figures regarding her pork exports that have been made public by the United States Food Administration.

In Canada, recognizing the extreme need for the saving of certain foods for the supply of the Allies, we have taken upon ourselves the task of reducing our consumption of wheat and hog products to two-thirds of the normal consumption.

The pork products exports from Canada in 1915 amounted to $6,000,000 pounds, and in 1914 to $5,500,000 pounds. This was increased in 1915 to $14,000,000 pounds and in 1917 to $27,000,000 pounds. Canada pork and bacon has to a very large extent replaced the Danish product, formerly the chief of Great Britain's external supplies, outside the United States.

A Valuable Car.
A car of No. 1 northern wheat was received in Winnipeg recently weighing 129,000 pounds and containing 2,150 bushels, with no dockage. The net proceeds of the car, less freight and commission, was $4,458.10. The weight of the wheat per measured bushel was 45 pounds. The car was loaded by George H. Hummel, of Nebraska, Sask.

Dairy Products.
The value of dairy products marketed in Manitoba during last year amounted to over $2,385,000, an increase of 15 per cent. on the figures for the preceding year.

Blankets for Samnies.
A contract for the value of $500-000 for war-blankets for the United States troops has been placed in Canada.

Germany Makes Offer to France

FRENCH newspapers and letters received on this side of the Atlantic explain, as the cables failed to do, the reasons underlying the fall of the Pain-leve Administration. They also give details of a remarkable peace offer made to the French Government, the treatment of which by the Government was the immediate cause of the downfall of Painleve. As remarked in the Toronto Mail and Empire previously, the French Socialist party was the prime mover in the overthrow, and no doubt had it not been able to seize upon the German peace offer as the lever to oust Painleve it would have found some other point upon which it could unite with other Parliamentary groups and achieve the desired end. And that the Painleve Government had no Socialist representative in it, that the Socialists had formally declined to assist in the administration when invited by Painleve, shows clearly enough that they had in advance determined upon an attitude of hostility, open or concealed.

It appears that Count von Buelow, representing the German Government, made a written offer to France, through a Belgian diplomat, of the following terms:
The evacuation of Northern France and compensation for damage done.
The evacuation of Belgium, restitution in an amount to be fixed in accordance with the Belgian law of damages, the convening of a peace conference at Brussels under the presidency of King Albert.
Negotiations concerning a satisfactory settlement of the Alsace-Lorraine question.

These proposals were not intended, according to the German claim, to constitute a separate peace, but it was contended that if these matters could be adjusted the other difficulties might be taken up with the other powers later on.

The proposal was directed to M.
Briand, former Premier, and by him communicated to M. Ribot, Foreign Minister, who in turn consulted with Mr. Balfour and Baron Sonnino, of Italy, without conferring with the Foreign Affairs Committee of the French Senate. Later on M. Ribot referred publicly to German offers being "whispered about," and asserted that France would not fall into the "trap." This created a sensation and a secret session of the chamber was held at which M. Ribot was condemned for calling a "trap" what appeared to the United Socialists and some other groups as a genuine offer of peace. They demanded his resignation. At first Ribot refused to resign, and only did so when the matter to the attention of President Poincare. Following these incidents the German Foreign Minister, von Kuehlmann, publicly declared that Germany would "never, never" give up any part of Alsace-Lorraine.

M. Barthou succeeded M. Ribot, and was acceptable to the Socialists as a "new man," because he had not spoken since the beginning of the war, though his Imperialist past was well known. To the dismay of the Socialists, and maybe to the consternation of M. Painleve, Barthou's first speech was a passionate declaration that France would never abate her claim to Alsace-Lorraine, and that, moreover, France must be guaranteed in possession of her lost provinces by establishing a neutral zone in adjoining German territory. He concluded by saying that the nature of the guarantee and the extent of the territory to be neutralized were both dependent upon the extent of the French victory. This was the first time since the beginning of the war that a French Minister had declared it to be the intention of France to deprive Germany of any territory, other than colonial, except Alsace and Lorraine, which are not properly German provinces. The statement was a contradiction to what Painleve had said earlier, namely, that France stood only for a policy of "disannexation" with regard to Alsace-Lorraine.

Naturally the Barthou statement created a tremendous sensation.
Thomas, leading the Socialists, who are said to be ready to fight for years for Alsace-Lorraine, but not for a moment to gain a foot of German territory, demanded that M. Pain-leve declare whether M. Barthou presented the Government as he was because the Premier said that he and
M. Barthou would confer that a vote of want of confidence was not immediately passed. Details concerning what happened since then are wanting, but there seems little doubt that M. Barthou declined to present to the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate the letter of former Premier Briand. In view of the presented critical situation, when it is said that there is a rapid growth among those Socialists who favor an immediate peace conference, it was satisfactory to the Allies that M.
Thomas, despite his fine record as Minister of War, was not called upon by President Poincare. It is believed that Clemenceau will greatly moderate the French claims as enunciated by M. Barthou.

nearly one hundred and forty tons.

TO SUCCEED IN BUSINESS.

First Find the Kind of Work to Which You Are Best Suited.

A friend of mine who is as good a man in his line as anybody in the United States stood in my office a few days ago and said a surprising thing.
I had been complimenting him on one of his latest achievements. His face lighted up as he remembered. "Of course I got a lot of money for that job, but between you and me, I'd do those things for nothing if I couldn't get anybody to pay me for them. I'd rather do them than eat. It's a shame to take the money. Don't give me away, or they'll be asking me to cut down my price, and I'll be doing it."

That sounds like bunk. But wait a minute. Think clear through the proposition. This man will never be cutting down his price at all. It is exactly the other way around with him, and he knows it. The truth is that his income goes on rising, because there he works for less bidding for his services. What he meant was that he had found the secret of progress and advancement—namely, a field of activity to which he is suited and in which he is so interested and happy that he works as if he were playing. No wonder he performs miracles.

Naturally he is glad to have the large sums of money he earns. They are a sort of crude measurement of his efficiency. They show in a rough way how other people estimate his value.
But the main point is that he has found his niche and that he concentrates on his job for days and weeks at a stretch.
All his thought is concerned with what he can put into his work, not what he can get out of it. Lucky man!

The moral of this story? Don't take for granted that you are interested in your work. Don't assume that you are not. Give your mind to the study of your work that you really dislike. Of course you should give yourself a fair trial at a job before throwing it up because often a man learns to like something that he didn't like when he set out. But you know what? I don't don't jump at it indefinitely. Just and try something else. Cut and run before it is too late.

The acid test to apply to your job is this: If you had money enough to live on would you stay at it without pay?
If you don't love it that much that you would stay at it, if you are going and free from the responsibility and obligations which go with other jobs, you will enjoy your job. And if you don't enjoy your job, don't take it.

There are many other things to be said about this subject, but I will leave them to you. The only thing I want to say is that if you are not enjoying your job, you are not doing it right, and the sooner you quit, the better it will be for you.

LILUOKALANI AT 60.

Making a Hawaiian-English Dictionary for Use in Schools.

Hawaii's immortal singer, author of "Aloha Oe," known as Queen Lil in the days when she ruled the Hawaiian Islands, is now compiling a Hawaiian-English dictionary for use in the schools of the islands, though she is now nearly 60 years old. This was learned lately from Mrs. Dr. Atcherley of 1745 Nelson street, Vancouver, a cousin of the former ruler.

Mrs. Atcherley spends every winter in the former queen's company. She last saw her distinguished relative on February 6 of this year, on which date she sailed for her home in Vancouver. Mrs. Atcherley is the wife of Dr. Atcherley of the royal navy, who is now in active service on the Atlantic. He is a descendant of the famous Sir Roger Atcherley, who gave Leadenhall market, London, to the poor. Mrs. Atcherley's full name is Princess Haaboe-Kahelohi-malie-Kahikoula Atcherley. She is a cousin of Queen Liliuokalani and a foster daughter of King Kalakoua and his queen consort, Kapio-Lani, and was reared in the islands. She now has in her parlor a treasured legacy from the late king, the portraits of himself and his consort painted in 1885 by Petrovits, R. A.

Mrs. Atcherley said former Queen Liliuokalani celebrated her 78th birthday on Tuesday, September 2. She was born in 1833 and during her life has occurred the stormiest monarchial and republican crises in the history of the Hawaiian island group. Queen Liliuokalani is now an old woman whose thoughts are much on the future. She is a true Christian and has left behind all the worldly affairs which marred her middle life. To-day she lives in a splendid house near Honolulu, visited by her direct relatives, but keeping aloof from the general tourist public which still endeavours to see the famous figure of the great political game of the early '90s.

Only on her birthdays is the public allowed to approach her. Then she sits in state on her front porch and visitors walk by, bowing to her and receiving in return the stately salutation of the former queen. Great throngs of natives and of white people attend this function, the whites mainly through curiosity, the natives through deep respect. Also, on these days, the royal band plays at the former queen's residence. It is led by the original band leader, the German musician who was bandmaster through the last regime of royalty in the Sandwich Islands.

On other days the queen sees no one, though tourists frequently stroll through her grounds in hope of a distant glimpse of the former queen. Mrs. Atcherley visits her each day, and spends considerable time in her garden. She is now engaged in a work which shows that her mental powers are not impaired. She is compiling a Hawaiian-English dictionary and already has 4,000 words.

queen to bring the kingdom under purely native rule and control, called on the United States Government to send troops to protect American property. A small body of troops was sent. Under protest, and acting on the advice of her ministers, the queen surrendered to these troops to avoid bloodshed. A treaty of annexation was negotiated the next month with the United States, but this was withdrawn by President Cleveland when he came into power in March, 1893.

The United States Government then ordered the reinstatement of the queen. The republican government which had been set up when she relinquished office was under Sanford B. Dole, who was president. Backed by the whites and with the sympathy of many Americans at home, he refused to allow the queen's reinstatement. The United States then refused to intervene to reinstate the queen.

On July 4, 1894, the republic was proclaimed. A plot during that year to overthrow the republic was frustrated, and the queen was arrested. The plot was broken up on January 6, 1895, and on January 24 she was named her claim to the throne and nounced her allegiance to the republic. On September 17 she was granted conditional pardon and on August 12, 1897, under President McKinley, the Hawaiian Islands were annexed to the United States. S. B. Dole, the first president of the republic, was made the first governor. Seven years ago Queen Liliuokalani was granted a pension of $40,000 per year by the American Government.

Newfoundland's "Hit."

Newfoundland, though her population does not exceed that of a populous English industrial city, has sent 10,000 men to fight the battles of the British Empire in this war. It is a magnificent record, and exactly what one would have expected from a country which sent its fishing ships to help in the destruction of the Great Armada. It was in 1583 that Sir Humphrey Gilbert took possession of the island in the name of the "most gracious Queen Elizabeth." It was only five years later that La Pellicosa Armada left Cornwall for English waters, so that Newfoundland had an early opportunity of establishing a tradition for gallantry which Newfoundlanders are so splendidly vindicating in the present war. The "Antient and Loyal Colony" of Newfoundland is celebrating the four hundred and twentieth anniversary of her discovery, an occasion which is seized by the rest of the Empire to wish her Godspeed.

Lower Canada.

As the train from Buffalo to Toronto was winding around the Esplanade, an enchanted American soldier gazed from the mountain upon the beautiful scene far below.

"That must be Lower Canada," he remarked.

REALISTIC STAGECRAFT.

The Electric Light is Responsible For Many Innovations.

The introduction of electric light was, of course, responsible for greater innovations in the art of stage decoration than any other one thing. It was now possible to light up equally well any portion of the stage, and so the "apron" was dispensed with and the picture frame proscenium introduced.

The cry for realism which Ibsen's dramas had aroused was now taken up by the scene builders with enthusiastic vigor, and "nature" was reproduced in every material detail. "We must show life exactly as it is," became their motto.

These changes naturally also had an effect upon the actors themselves and upon what they said. Formerly the actors were continually conscious of the presence of the audience, and to a considerable degree addressed it directly. Now they could interpret the story on the stage, entirely ignoring, apparently, the presence of the audience.

This change in the conception of the play as a whole, as being made up not alone of dialogue and recitation, but also of action and pictorial representation, has had a very far-reaching effect on our present day conception of the drama.

A Flight From Death

A Story of the French Revolution.

By JAMES BRAINARD

Truth is so much stranger than fiction that perhaps it is better to state that the main incident of this story actually happened just as it is recorded.

The French revolution had reached that stage commonly designated the reign of terror. Every day the doors of the Conciergerie prison opened to let out a number of human beings not to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," as was enunciated shortly before by the American colonists in their Declaration of Independence, but to suffer death on the guillotine. At first the victims were confined to those who stood for tyranny. The king, the queen, the nobility, royalty and its supporters lost their heads. Then the different factions that had brought about the revolution began to fight for power, and the conservatives were guillotined by the radicals. After this whoever desired to get rid of one he wished to remove had but to inform upon him as an enemy of France, and the accused would join the "innumerable caravan" passing under the yoke of the guillotine to his long home.

It was not always an enemy that was to be got rid of. Sometimes it was a friend. That friend might possess something that at his death would fall into the hands of the informer.

There lived in Paris at that time a young couple, Henri and Marie Chateaubrun, who were devoted to each other. Henri, when the struggle against oppression began, took a deep interest in it, advocating the reforms that were proposed. He and a friend of his, Antoine Boyer, became somewhat prominent as leaders in that quarter of the city in which they lived. Boyer, who was a bachelor, came often to the Chateaubrun's to consult with his friend upon the course to be adopted by them in public affairs. Mme. Chateaubrun took a lively interest in the early efforts of the revolutionists to make France a constitutional monarchy and was usually present at the conferences of her husband and his friend.

During these meetings Boyer conceived a passion for Mme. Chateaubrun. For a time he struggled against it, not even acknowledging to himself that he loved his friend's wife. But the time came when he knew that life for him was not worth living without her.

As the revolution proceeded the two friends and coworkers found themselves on different paths, while Boyer continued a conservative, while Henri joined the ranks of the bloodthirsty Jacobins. The latter did not give up his visits to the Chateaubrun's. Indeed, he was not able to keep away from the young wife of his friend. Since neither he nor her husband suspected his love he was always welcome.

And now, the revolution having swept beyond the conservatives, those who had hoped for beneficent results to France, of a better regime, found themselves in the position of enemies to their country. In attempting to stay the flow of blood they incurred the enmity of those who were shedding it. Then it was that Mme. Chateaubrun began to fear for the safety of her husband. She urged him to retire from any further participation in public affairs, to go to a small estate he owned in the country. But, dangerous as it was to continue a contest with the leaders of the mob, Chateaubrun was too much of a man to cease to defend what he considered the best interests of his country.

Fiercer and fiercer grew the mob, requiring of their leaders more and larger drafts of blood. Mme. Chateaubrun begged her husband to leave Paris. He sent for his friend Boyer, now one of the Jacobin leaders, and asked him what he had better do. Boyer said he would take the matter under advisement and let him know his conclusions.

The day after this interview there was a knock at Chateaubrun's door, and when it was opened a party of soldiers entered and informed Chateaubrun that he was under arrest by order of the convention. In spite of his clinging wife he was dragged away and lodged in the Conciergerie.

He demanded—albeit persons made the demand—to know the charge brought against him. He received no reply till he was brought up for the semblance of a trial he was accused of conspiring with others to bring the heir to the throne across the border and establish him as king. Chateaubrun knew that there was not a word of truth in the charge, but its very absurdity told him that it was a pretext rather than an accusation, and he lost hope at once.

There were twenty-one persons tried at the same time with Chateaubrun and convicted on various pretexts. They were all sentenced to be executed on the guillotine on the same day. All were imprisoned in the Conciergerie, which was the depot of supplies, so to speak, for the terrible engine of death. The day before the execution, Mme. Chateaubrun went to Boyer and begged him to save her husband. He told her that to show favor to one convicted by the mob's tribunal would be to endanger his own head. She was astonished that he considered the risk in the case of his old friend, but Boyer maintained resolutely that he dared not interfere. From Boyer the wife went to the Conciergerie to tell her husband of the failure of his mission and to bid him goodbye. She was taken from the prison and carried home in a swoon. The next morning a number of carts were backed up to the door of the Conciergerie, and a soldier in the prison called the names of twenty-one men who were to go forth to execution. Among them was Henri Chateaubrun. They all walked out to the carts, some of them dragging themselves, some erect, all of them showing in their pale and haggard features the mark of death. Standing in the carts, they were driven toward the Seine and crossed it by a bridge entering the Place de la Revolution, since called the Place de la Concorde. There stood the guillotine with persons to work it ready to lop off twenty-one heads, and there stood a crowd, kept back by soldiers, to witness the gruesome sight. The carts stopped beside the machine, and the victims descended.

And now began a work that even an implement so well adapted to the purpose found it difficult to perform. Each one of the prisoners, hatted and with his hands tied behind his back, in turn stepped up to it, was laid upon it, strapped to it; the knife fell, his head rolled into the basket, and his body was removed to make room for the next victim. Fifteen of the twenty-one had been executed when the guillotine refused to work. Whether the knife got wedged in the grooves or whether the machinery that raised the ax or that which detached it after it had been raised got out of order doesn't matter. Something had gone wrong, and those in charge of the executions were unable to fix it.

The proceedings were stopped, and a messenger was sent for mechanics to put the guillotine in order. This required time. Waiting is not conducive to discipline. The soldiers who were there to keep the crowd back grew lax, and by the time workmen had arrived people had eluded their way close upon the remaining six men standing in line waiting for the repairs on the machine that was to make corpses of them.

This was repeated so often and was disobeyed so often that at last very little attention was paid to it. Chateaubrun presently found himself in the first line of spectators. Then, instead of being in the line next the guillotine, he found himself in the second. In the pushing that continued he was wedged back into the third line and at last was at the back of the crowd that was there to see his head cut off.

There was something radically wrong with the guillotine. The man being hammered and pulled and pushed and screwed and unscrewed. Meanwhile the day was ended, and it was growing dark. Chateaubrun, considering the sight of his execution not worth so long a wait, quietly walked away.

The Place de la Concorde is at the beginning of the Champs Elysees. Chateaubrun, every moment expecting to be missed, concealing as well as he could his head, his heart beating wildly, passed into the Champs Elysees eager to run, but forcing himself to walk leisurely. There he made his way onward in the shadow of the trees. Finally, when he had gone far enough from the scene of his intended execution, meeting a man coming toward him, he said:

"Monsieur, a friend of mine just now, who is a great way, tied my hands behind my back and ran away with my hat. Kindly unloosen me."

"Certainly, monsieur; it will give me great pleasure to do so."

Thanking the man who had relieved him of the last mark of being an intended guillotine victim, Chateaubrun went into a side street and was lost. The guillotine was fixed, but there were twenty instead of twenty-one persons executed.

No word of Chateaubrun's escape reached his wife during the day of execution nor the next nor the next. Indeed, it is questionable if his absence from the number of condemned was noticed by the authorities. Mme. Chateaubrun was in the condition of one stunned. Boyer called to see her and found her heartbroken. She told him she wished to die. He begged her to live for his sake, confessing the love he had long felt for her. She was too paralyzed mentally and physically to even consider what he said. Not till some time afterward did she realize that he might have had her husband put out of his way.

But within a short time a woman stopped at Mme. Chateaubrun's home and told her that her husband was alive in the Netherlands and desired her to come to him. He had not dared write her, fearing to implicate her as a correspondent with an emigre. While waiting even to announce her happiness to Boyer she set out for a place of her husband's exile, and in a few days he was supposed to have gone to his long home and the wife who had mourned him were clasped in each other's arms.

Chateaubrun never had any evidence that his old friend had betrayed him except that his wife told him that Boyer had declared his love for her. He believed then that Boyer had caused his downfall. But he never met Boyer again. Subsequent changes placed the Jacobin in another faction, and Boyer met his death by the guillotine he had intended for Chateaubrun.
